Glycerin vs Soft FX: What Product is Right for You?

Do you know the difference between Soft FX and Glycerin? Do you know when to use each?

Soft FX was formulated by the Li Pigments Lab to work perfectly with all Li Pigment's formulations as well as other pigment brands. The Glycerin available for purchase in our store is also made by Li Pigments from a high grade, Vegan and Kosher Glycerin. Li Pigments only sources their materials from reputable suppliers and ensures all materials are tested for purity.

If your pigment is too thick, or you prefer a thinner, loose pigment consider purchasing a bottle of Soft FX. A couple of drops of this dilution solution will help thin out your pigment to your liking! Do you know what 3 things to look for when inspecting your needles? 🔎💉🤔

Whether you use a Jewelers loupe or a pair of wearable loupes, knowing what to look for when inspecting your needles is the most important step. Here are three things to look for that will help you when inspecting your needles.

1️⃣ Look for bends in the needle tip. If we were to tattoo with a bent and damaged needle, it can rip and tear the skin causing unnecessary trauma to the skin.

2️⃣ Look for foreign objects or fuzz stuck on and inside the tips. If we were to use a needle with fuzz, debris, or anything foreign stuck in it, it could be implanted and we'd be putting the client at risk of complications and infection.

3️⃣ Look to see if the needles are textured or unpolished. A smooth and highly polished needle will have less friction than a textured needle. Less friction = less trauma = better results!

While it can be few and far between, imperfect and damaged needles can occur with any manufacturer and any lot of needles, so it's important to always inspect every needle we intend to use on our clients. Our clients depend on us, so use these three tips.

If you still need help with understanding why you should eye-loupe or what to look for, consider taking my Needle and the Prick® Course!
