About the Program

The Registered Medical Coder (RMC) Certification Training Program is the only government licensed medical coding program that receives oversight from the Nonpublic Postsecondary Education Commission that is completely online. The program is incredibly popular amongst pharmaceutical professionals, physicians and PAs. It is designed for the working coder and those who are employed and just starting their coding careers. Unlike other certification exams, students take the final certification exam online and are able to use not only the current year's coding manuals, but the resources of the internet to assist in finding answers as well. This course covers anatomy and terminology before moving on to medical coding, and has an extended section on Medicare as well as private insurance. It is an online, six month, self-paced program. It is recommend that students take the certification exam within two weeks of their course completion date. You are allowed to set the amount of interaction you wish to have with your assigned instructor, and if a question or issue were to arise, you would have the option of contacting either the Medical Management Institute, or your instructor for additional assistance and support.

The credentialing body behind this certification is the Association of Registered Health Care Professionals (ARHCP), which is a member-based organization whose main focus is licensing only. The certification exam is administered online and the fee is included in the tuition. Each student has 24 hours to complete the exam with two attempts, and you must score a 76 or better to pass. The results are available immediately after completion, and after passing you will become a Registered Medical Coder and member of the ARHCP. To renew the RMC Certification, you are required to submit 12 continuing education units (CEUs) to the ARHCP, along with paying the $120 membership fee annually. This fee includes an online update exam, a one year membership through the ARHCP and a one year subscription to The Medical Business Journal, a monthly newsletter provided by the Medical Management Institute.
