

STYLE | FASHION | SOCIAL

PaperCITY

HOUSTON JUNE 2014

SUMMER
LOVE
OF

STYLE:
THE COLORS
OF SUMMER

WEDDINGS
BLISSFUL
DETAILS

A LOOK BACK:
THE WAY
WE WED

CHATting WITH:
SARAH
JESSICA
PARKER

Bride's Blue BOOK

PHOTOGRAPHY: FERNANDO CEJA, MODEL: ANDRESSA FONTANA FOR SUPREME MANAGEMENT, WY, JACIN MUI TOP: $1996, AT: ATRIM READY TO WEAR, JILLMAN MARCUS, MORGES BORN, ELEGANT ANDREW HESBIE BELL BOUTIQUE $3,540, AT: KURT PRYOR TEN.COM, ST. PLOST CARLOS ANDRÉS PARRA FOR EN ART MANAGEMENT, DALLAS, HAIR AND MAKEUP: LAURA ARAMS FOR KIM DAWSON AGENCY, DALLAS, ASSISTANT STYLIST: WENDY CAFFRETTI

Drunk With Success

Forget snail slime, snake venom and 14K facials. The newest exotic skincare sensation comes in the form of a fruit from a tree indigenous to Africa. When eaten by giraffes, elephants and monkeys, the marula fruit makes them stumble drunkenly around.

But when used by humans, the fruit's mysterious oil has another kind of intoxicating effect: beautiful skin. The woman harnessing the power of this magical elephant elixir hails not from Africa, but from Houston. Meet Tiffany Masterson, mommy of four, resident of Southampton and creator of the overnight-sensation skincare line Drunk Elephant. When she's not cooking big dinners or shuttling children to and fro, she can be found discussing crosspolymers with beauty editors or taking orders from her new retail partners, Houston's Sloan/Hall, über-chic L.A. outpost Fred Segal and anthropologie.com.

Drunk Elephant products are nontoxic, which means they contain synthetic clinical ingredients to make them effective but no preservatives, perfumes or dyes that can irritate. "It's not what's in there," Masterson says, "it's what is not." Six products are currently available (marula oil itself, vitamin C day serum, glycolic night serum, moisturizing sunscreen and two cleansing beauty bars), with an eye serum and SPF lip balm on the horizon — reason enough for not just elephants but beauty seekers everywhere to swoon. $25 to $90, at Sloan/Hall; drunkelephant.com. Francine Davis Ballard

Tiffany Masterson wears Logan Neitzel, from Sloan/Hall. Styled by Michelle Aviña. Hair and makeup Wendy Martin of Makeup by Wendy.

