

Tuesday 3 November 2009

FREE

London Evening Standard

standard.co.uk

ANDARD TUESDAY 3 NOVEMBER 2009

33

Fashion, Style & Sex

IT COST HOW MUCH?

FANS of Milanese boutique 10 Corso Como are in for a treat this week as founder Carla Sozzani brings her cut-price wares to the net. Launching today, as part of a collaboration with net-a-porter's sister website, the outnet.com, customers will be able to bag 10 of Corso Como's most baffling bargains with only an effortless click of a mouse. The stars of the show include a stunning Prada dress, which has more than £2,000 off its original price-tag, and these Balenciaga boots, which were £635 when they first hit the runway but are now £381. www.theoutnet.com

Karen Dacre

THE IT BAG

MULBERRY is taking "geek chic" to a whole new level this week with the launch of its first collection of laptop cases. Designed in collaboration with Mac (the computer of choice for creatives, darling), the range includes bags to carry MacBook and MacPro laptops as well as leather pouches to shield your iPhone and iPod Touch from the bumps and grumps of city life. Styles include a vibrant fuchsia pink option as well as a smudged leopard-print one that's certain to turn a few heads on the Central line. Depressingly dull canvas cases: RIP. £350 (01761 234 200)

KD

MICHELINE STAR

THE grande dame of aromatherapy, Micheline Arcier, has been mixing and developing her own essential oils since the early Sixties. She has just started selling her own bath, body and face oils exclusively through the Shop at Bluebird, whose spa also offers a range of treatments using her oils. Based on closely guarded formulas, these really are the Rolls-Royce of aromatherapy products, far removed from the cheap imposters that flood the market today. Prices start at £9 for a bath oil. For treatments, contact the Spa at Bluebird, 350 King's Road, SW3, 020 7349 5090. Laura Craik

