Each Red Twist cashmere wrap for women helps underprivileged Chinese girls attend school in China.

This is possibly the most unique cashmere for women you've ever seen.

Red Twist wraps resemble a long cardigan minus the buttons, with two sleeves and a very wide body. Then you take the flaps and twist them around you any variety of ways until you're warm and comfy—and looking chic.

I know because I've been test-driving one for a couple of months now, and I have to admit, it's very clever. As a constant traveler and inherently cold person, I'm always searching for a blanket: now I'm wrapped up in one that's far softer and a fashion statement.

The wraps are made from 100% pure Mongolian cashmere so you can imagine how soft they are. Contrary to some cashmere for women it isn't bulky. So you can wrap away and not emerge looking like a snowman.

Red Twist is one-size-fits-all and comes in 16 colors, including a host of yummy neutrals called "the classics" and a series of updated colors for 2013.

By the way, I spy an emerald green in there called "marine green," which if you didn't know is Pantone's 2013 color of the year.

Naturally I save the best news for last: there is a charitable component. With the purchase of a wrap ($175) a portion of the proceeds benefits the Josephine Charles Foundation, which will in turn help underprivileged Chinese girls attend school.

I think that is a thought we can all cozy up to this winter.
