URBAN GARDENER

After years as a food writer, Chicago native Heather Shouse switched gears and opened her own garden atelier, Bottle & Branch, providing interior-exterior landscaping and unique plant designs. Boasting major food cred and a master gardening certification, Shouse found common ground between her two passions—as her botanic installations can be seen in some of the hottest culinary spots in the city, from Perennial Virant to Balena. ### BOLD & BEAUTIFUL

Lisa Cotten, a former model now based in Winnetka, began designing jewelry in 2005, and after gathering a devoted following, launched her eponymous line that is now available throughout Chicago. Known for her striking color combinations, Cotten's inspirations come from travel, architecture, midcentury furniture and her grandmother. "I create collections that my grandmother would be proud to wear," she explains. Pieces are available through local shops, trunk shows and by private appointment. ### CABINET OF CURIOSITIES

With an already successful vintage and reclaimed furniture store in Andersonville—Roost—shop owner Daniel Malone needed yet another outpost to house his growing collection of tableware. And so he opened The Hutch in 2012, a neighboring tabletop boutique brimming with stacks of dishware, barware, serveware and pottery from the early 1900s through the midcentury. There's truly something here for everyone. 773.506.0406
