Scratch, scratch, scratch.

"Stop it, Ginger," said Dad grumpily.

Something was on Emma's mind.

"Dad, can you buy me a pair of roller skates?" Emma asked.

"Didn't I just get you that expensive puzzle set last week?"

"But my friends just got roller skates. Ginger wants to learn to skate too. Don't you, Ginger?"

Ginger purred softly.

Dad yawned and gave Ginger a tummy rub. "Not this time, Emma. Money doesn't grow on trees."

A young girl with black hair in a ponytail, wearing a green shirt with yellow dinosaur patterns and a blue backpack, sits on a wooden chair. She is holding up a green 5 Euro note and a pink 10 Euro note. A brown cat is peeking out from her blue backpack. The background is a light blue sky with white clouds. At the top, a green tree-like shape has several Euro banknotes (5, 10, and 50) hanging from it.

Emma felt a little annoyed at Dad.
He was always saying that.

What if money did grow on trees?

A young girl with black hair in a ponytail, wearing a green shirt with yellow dinosaur patterns, is shown in a colorful, whimsical landscape. She is holding a purple dinosaur toy and a yellow toy tent. The background is filled with various toys and objects, including a red toy train, a blue toy house, a yellow toy car, a red toy ball, and a yellow toy house. There are also colorful bunting flags and a large yellow sun. A white sign with a black border is tilted in the upper left, containing the text.

She started to daydream about all the things she would buy.

What do you do when your dad refuses to buy you something you really want?
Put him up for sale, of course.
Well, according to Emma anyway.
That sounds like a great plan,
until she realises that what she really wants can't be bought...
