What is Regenerative Agriculture?

In the simplest terms, regenerative agriculture is a holistic way of growing food that closely mimics nature's design, going beyond simply sustaining our natural resources, to replenishing or regenerating them. While the name may be new, regenerative practices and ideology are rooted in thousands of years of ancestral knowledge from around the globe. Emphasizing social fairness and soil health, regenerative agriculture honors the growers' livelihoods and sovereignty, enabling them to optimally steward the land for the future.

At Navitas, we believe that when it comes to addressing the climate crisis, improving public health, and supporting rural economies, agriculture's impact is unparalleled. Our partnership with Regenerative Organic Certified (ROC™) affirms our belief in this idea and provides verification of our practices through a formal auditing process at every point of impact. By aligning with ROC™, we hope to play a larger role in meeting this moment by honoring the integral interconnection of human and planetary health.
