

LIFESTYLE

House of Meraki x Gemfields steps up presence in the Middle East

BY ADMIN · FEBRUARY 20, 2024

The emerald-focused fine jewellery label, House of Meraki, is a natural fit for Gemfields, a world-leading responsible miner and marketer of coloured gemstones and majority owner of the Kagem emerald mine in Zambia. The brainchild of designer Gargi Rathi, House of Meraki is devoted to these brilliant green gems, which as well as being beautiful are said to be credited with a healing aura. House of Meraki in 2014. Her aim is to make the majestic power of emeralds, and the fine craftsmanship that defines her pieces, accessible to women the world over.

The brainchild of designer Gargi Rathi, House of Meraki is devoted to these brilliant green gems, which as well as being beautiful are said to be credited with a healing aura. Rathi discovered their allure as a child and has never looked back, completing a course in gemmology, and founding House of Meraki in 2014. Her aim is to make the majestic power of emeralds, and the fine craftsmanship that defines her pieces, accessible to women the world over.

The House of Meraki curated collection now available on Ounass includes earrings, rings, bracelets and necklaces, featuring Gemfields' Zambian emeralds from Kagem, set in 18k yellow gold. Styles range from the celestial – the Venus ring and pendant and Starling necklace – to more classical designs, like an array of simple stud earrings, and some more avant-garde, such as the evil eye motif. Timeless and elegant, they are set to be iconic heirlooms.

The House of Meraki x Gemfields collection ranges from AED 4,300 to AED 69,230 and is available at: www.ounass.ae