Which Soft Packer is Right for Me?

When searching for the right soft packer, there are a lot of variables to consider. What size should I get? Can I find one to match my skin tone? How much money do I want to spend? Can I pack it comfortably? How realistic does it look/feel?

Inexpensive packers are often made out of very soft, porous materials like elastomers, TPR, or polymer/oil blends. These materials will often have trade names like "soft skin," "cyberskin," "sil-a-gel," etc. Because they are so soft, they can feel quite realistic as a flaccid penis. They will tend to show wear, dirt, and even slight shrinkage over months of use, and they can never be completely sanitized. Porous packers usually have to be replaced periodically. But, they tend to be cheaper than silicone packers.

Packers made from 100% silicone tend to be a bit denser and heavier than porous-material packers, but they can still be very soft. Silicone is a non-porous material, and as such it can be sanitized and it doesn't get as dirty as porous packers. Silicone resists shrinking and fading, and will last a very long time (if you don't accidentally tear it). For people with sensitive skin, silicone can be a good choice as it is hypoallergenic.

When considering size, remember that flaccid penises tend to be much smaller than erect penises! The average flaccid length of a penis is between 3.5 to 4 inches long. Bigger isn't always better.

How to Care for Your Soft Packer

Wash your soft packer with warm water and a gentle soap. Rinse and pat dry with a lint-free cloth.

The surface of your soft packer may feel sticky due to the nature of the material. Lightly dusting the packer's entire surface with corn starch (available in the grocery store baking aisle) will keep the packer from sticking to your skin and hair, and will help it stay cleaner. The easiest way to apply corn starch is with a soft-bristle paintbrush or make-up brush. Do not use powders containing talc!

Soft packers are not designed for sexual penetration. Unless your soft packer is 100% silicone, it is porous and cannot be sanitized.

Minimize wear & tear by wearing packer in a pocket-style harness or pocket-style packing underwear/jock.
