

EYEBROWS

"Eyes are usually our most important feature. Keep them looking their best with well groomed well shaped brows."
-Danielle Doyle

1. The general rule is that the eyebrow should start with a straight vertical line from the eye's inner corner straight up to the brow.
2. The arch of the brow should begin as seen in the illustration, at the outside edge of the iris of the eye. The arch helps to lift and open up the eyes.
3. The outside corner of your eye is where you want your eyebrow to stop as seen in the illustration. If your eyebrows grow past that point, it tends to make your eyes go down. (a great tip for after you read these three steps if you are unsure of where to tweeze, is to get a white pencil and apply it to the area you want to tweeze so that you can clearly see the shape you are going to have.)

1. To find where your brow begins hold a pencil very carefully vertically against the side of the nose. This should line up with the beginning of the eye, the eraser nearest the nostril and the point nearest the brow. Tweeze excess hair that extends beyond the pencil over toward the nose. Excess hair towards the nose tends to make your eyes look close together.

2. Keep the eraser end in place and move the top point toward the temple stopping diagonally at the point above the outside edge of the iris of your eye. This is where the arch of your brow should begin. Being sure not to make the brows too thin, tweeze away excess hairs beneath the arch.
3. Once again keeping the eraser in place, move the pencil point to the outside corner of the eye. This is where you want your eyebrows to stop. Tweeze hairs that extend beyond the point where the pencil meets the brow. If your eyebrows grow past that point it tends to make your eyes go down. If the brow naturally stops before this point they should be filled in with shadow.
