

Labelling on Wholesale

In December 2016, new labelling requirements come into effect within the EU. This document explains the information we provide to our customers so that they—and we—fulfil our legal obligations.

What you will find on our wholesale labels:

- Name of the cheese
- Milk type and pasteurisation status
- Recommended storage conditions
- Net quantity
- The date of minimum durability (use by or best before)
- Any relevant further suggestions for handling
- Added ingredients, where relevant
- Our business name, address, and healthmark

What you will not find on our wholesale labels:

- Ingredients: An ingredients list is not required for cheese or dairy products that do not contain added ingredients. This information is shown separately on the labels of these products when required.
- Allergens: The listed allergens include milk, but separate 'contains milk' statements are not required on cheese; no allergens other than milk are present in our cheeses.
- QUID: A QUID declaration is not required for the cheeses that we sell.
- Origin labelling: This is not currently required for dairy products such as cheese.
- Nutrition information: This is not required to be listed on cheeses sold in bulk or cut-to-order formats.

A note on nutrition information:

Items sold to customers in a prepacked format now require a label with nutrition information. Our wholesale cheeses are sold in bulk; however, we appreciate that our customers may wish to cut and prepack cheeses they buy from us for retail sale. To help with this, full nutrition information for all of our products can now be found in the Quality System section of our website.

A note on allergens:

No allergens other than milk are present in our cheeses, but we cannot guarantee their absence, or that cross-contamination between cheeses made with different types of milk (e.g. cow, goat, sheep) will not occur. A full breakdown of the allergens present in our non-cheese products can be found in the Quality Section system of our website.

Please feel free to speak with your wholesale account manager if you have any questions.
