

About Lynda Wolters, Author

Lynda Wolters was diagnosed with stage 4 terminal mantle cell lymphoma in August 2016 and is currently continuing treatment. She uses her vast experiences intertwined with her personal journey to tell stories of the support she and others need and want in navigating the tumultuous waters of cancer. From this experience and many conversations with dozens of patients weighing in on their needs, wants, and dislikes, she wrote Voices of Cancer. This book helps educate, dispel fears, and start positive conversations about what a cancer diagnosis truly means, while shining a light on how best to support a loved one on their own terms.

Lynda was born and raised in a tiny farming community of 400 in northern Idaho. She worked on the family farm; her first job being picking rocks out of the fields. When she was old enough, she moved up in the farming world to driving trucks and the combine during harvest. After high school, she traveled to New York for a few months to be a nanny before moving to Las Vegas, where she went on with her schooling.

She moved back home to Idaho to raise her three sons and continues to reside there with her husband and her long-haired miniature dachshund, Tucker "Bug."

Lynda currently works in a law firm in Boise and enjoys ballroom and swing dancing, horseback riding, and kayaking and rafting the rivers of Idaho. She has a heart for people and enjoys volunteering. She spends a bulk of her free time at her family's cabin where she writes with Bug on her lap. One of her favorite organizations that she is dedicated to support is "Epic Experience" located in Colorado and whose mission empowers adult cancer survivors and 'thrivers' to live beyond cancer.
