

Positively PINK

Want a few guilt-free reasons to drop some cash this month? Every one of these gorgeous goodies helps fund the fight against breast cancer.

This cedar and rose-infused candle beautifully illuminates a woven palm leaf pattern in the cut glass. Thirty-five percent of proceeds support the Breast Cancer Research Foundation (BCRF), an organization that has donated $45 million this year to the cause.

Cedar Rose Crystal Cane candle, Agraria, $35; agrariahome.com.

Perk up your work space: 20 percent of profits from this poppy desktop collection will be donated to the Young Survival Coalition, a group that offers support to young women who are diagnosed with the disease.

Tape dispenser ($12), stapler ($14), and heavyweight ballpoint pen ($14), Poppin; poppin.com/octoberpink.

Swap out neutral blue or black jeans for this soft-gray pair, with an unexpected pink ascent on the ankle zippers. Fifty percent of sales go to the BCRF.

Denim jeans, Level 99, $135; level99jeans.com.

Adorned with three delicate diamonds, this graceful piece can fly solo or stack with other lightweight bangles. Twenty percent of proceeds will aid the Susan G. Komen Foundation, a group that has invested more than $2 billion in breast cancer research and programs since 1982.

Diamond and 18kt rose gold bangle, Jemma Wynne, $1,365; at Single Stone on Mission Street, 626-799-3109.

A vintage-style gingham print gives these menswear-inspired PJs a girlie touch. The makers are donating 20 percent of proceeds to the BCRF.

Cotton pajama set, Marigot, $115; marigotcollection.com.

As part of an initiative to educate young women about breast health, 100 percent of the sales of this vibrant underwire bra go to Bright Pink, an organization dedicated to risk reduction and early detection of breast and ovarian cancer.

Nylon-spandex bra, Aerie, $30; aerie.com.

Celebrity survivor Giuliana Rancic partnered with jewelry designer Suzanna Dai to make this bold day-to-night statement piece. Sixty percent of the price is donated to the BCRF.

Glass, plastic, zinc, and oxidized gold-plated necklace, Suzanna Dai for Loft, $60; loft.com.

Up to $50,000 from the sales of this bloom-decked bottle—filled with a fragrant blend of wild strawberry, jasmine, and rose—benefits the National Breast Cancer Foundation.

Daisy eau de parfum, Marc Jacobs, $79; macy's.com.

Teach yourself to play this petite maple and rosewood ukulele, or use it as a smile-inducing conversation piece on a bookshelf. Twenty percent of the purchase will support BCRF.

Kohala Soprano ukulele, Music & Arts, $100; available Sept. 29 at musicarts.com.

One hundred percent of the proceeds from this cheery cruiser go to Keep a Breast Foundation, which focuses on prevention and early detection.

Limited Edition Willow 3 City Bike, Brooklyn Cruiser, $649; brooklyncruiser.com.

Outside: a colorful hand-painted enamel compact. Inside: heavenly solid perfume in a lively floral mix of lily, peony, jasmine, and rose. One hundred percent of the suggested retail price will be donated to BCRF.

Evelyn Lauder Dream solid perfume compact, Estée Lauder, $50; esteelauder.com.

PASS ALONG TO A PATIENT

Brighten her week with a heartfelt tote, created by a radiation oncologist who has also gone through breast surgery herself. The bag includes an assortment of items to ease recovery, from healthy snack bars to wound- and skin-care sets. Buy for a friend or loved one, or give one (or more!) to an anonymous recipient. Fifteen percent of each sale will be donated to Friends Fighting Breast Cancer.

Nylon bag and recovery kit, BFFL Co., $100; bfflco.com.

