Introduction

Pottery is one of the oldest human inventions, with examples dating back beyond 30,000 years. Foundational to all cultures, pottery has remained utilitarian (storage) and ceremonial (art) since its inception. Shaped by hands, finished in fire, and used in daily life, pottery is inextricably linked to the human condition. Whether it's a large vessel stoically standing in a public space, a cluster of lavishly planted containers, or a complementary accent piece, nothing completes a room quite like pottery.

At Berbere, pottery remains a gateway to the cultures we trade with - we hope it provides the same inspiration for you.

The Inspiration Antique Greek Pithoi Planter

Pithos remains the Greek, and now most recognized western name for a large storage container. Pithoi were manufactured and exported across the Mediterranean. They were used most heavily in the Bronze Age for storing or shipping wine, olive oil, or various types of vegetable products. The external shape and materials have remained consistent for Millenia, consisting largely of a ceramic or terracotta jar, sides nearly straight or generously curved, and a large mouth with handles. Our antiques are 200+ years more aged, but our newer versions will develop the same character with time: medium, large, and xl sizes.

The Inspiration Antique Turkish Ödemiş Pot

Many regions claim to have the oldest pottery. Ödemiş, however, is in the furthest corner of Western Anatolia and among the Mediterranean's earliest inhabited settlements, circa 10,000BC. Pottery from the entirety of the Mediterranean likely began here - styles being replicated and adapted by each culture to serve their specific needs. While our antiques are 200-400 years old, the same look, technique, and craftsmanship are present in our reproductions, also from the region, made by generational potters. Vivid blue, white, natural, and half-glazed terracotta complement the collection.

The Inspiration Antique Moroccan Amphora Planter & Coastal Date Jar

Moroccan pottery is characteristically unique in that its desert culture emphasizes vessels used to store food and liquids, often in temperatures that exceed 100F. Most often, thick-walled yet porous clay is used to allow for heat exchange to keep things cool. Our antique Moroccan Amphoras were in use for at least a few hundred years. The same with our coastal date jars, filled with dates and half-buried in the sand for preservation and curing. Our reproductions aren't reproductions near so much as new versions that haven't been put into use yet. Five planters of various sizes with concentric ribbed rings and large openings complete the amphora collection, whereas beautiful tall cylindrical date jars with smaller openings provide the perfect contrast for grouped displays.
