

Venezuelan Humanitarian Crisis

A prolonged collapse of the economy and political institutions in Venezuela have given place to one of the worst humanitarian crises in modern history. Failed policies, government mismanagement, crime and corruption have decimated resources and local production, causing a collapse of the food and goods supply and health, utilities, transportation, education, and service infrastructure.

- Hyperinflation, unemployment and lack of cash.
- 92% of the population lives under poverty level with very limited access to food, basic goods and services. More than 15% eat off the trash.
- Children malnutrition exceeds the WHO crisis threshold. Because of it, about 300 thousand children are expected to die in 2018.
- 90% of prescribed medications cannot be found and hospitals lack of enough beds, essential supplies, and drinkable water.
- Fast rising death tolls from treatable diseases are in rapid ascend and once eradicated diseases are back. Vaccines have largely disappeared.
- Insecurity and fear in daily life. Now recognized as a violent narco-estate, Venezuela has one of the highest homicide rates in the world.
- A failed justice and prison system, impunity, political persecution, and systematic violation of human rights.
- Brain drain, with more than 4 million has left the country in the last few years, the first to leave mostly young professionals.
- Last waves of Venezuelan migrants, largely undocumented, are victims of trafficking, sexual slavery, and labor exploitation.
