above: With the intense Caribbean sun shining through the floor-to-ceiling windows, seating options in the dining area are also dressed in indoor/outdoor textiles, with the RH armchairs in a Perennials fabric and the Palecek side chairs in a Schumacher fabric. The herringbone console is from RH. opposite: Tech Lighting pendants over the island imbue the kitchen with personality. Sea turtles that feed and nest in Pelican Bay, which the villa sits on, make a fun appearance in the artwork.

through the room. The pool and landscaping were existing, but the storm damaged most of the landscaping. The villa was bought furnished, but the furniture was sparse, tired, stained and cheap. The clients really appreciate quality that lasts, so the beds were the only things we kept; everything else was replaced.

How was the space updated? The clients wanted to make the villa feel more like a home, for each room to feel different, and for it to be colorful, cheerful and inviting. The project was a little bit of everything, but it wasn't a gut renovation—the bathrooms weren't renovated; we did a facelift of the kitchen; we added a lot of electrical amenities, like USB ports. We also updated some of the outdoor furnishings and made the outdoor space feel like a continuation of the indoor space, which in turn made the great room feel that much larger. Structurally, though, everything remained the same.

With the villa in Anguilla and the clients in Pennsylvania, how did you manage the project? Everything was done remotely with the clients—I didn't meet them until the install. I actually got married at this villa (under a different owner), so the clients appreciated how much I loved it there and how excited I was to be a part of this. I was very familiar with the interior, so I didn't need an initial site visit. There were ongoing below. The living space in the great room is outfitted with fabrics made for beach life. The comfy RH sofa covered in a Parapic fabric faces an RH Wyeth coffee table, while the Palecek bentwood chairs, a reference to traditional Caribbean design, are upholstered in a Holly Hunt Great Outdoors fabric. In a nod to the sea turtles that gather outside the villa, custom pillows in a Schumacher turtle print mingle with orange Fret- and Mokum-covered ones. Indoor/ outdoor carpet from Couristan is a worry-free addition.
