“Informed Consent” means that you are an individual at least 18 years of age and are able to comprehend that which you are consenting to, and that you are providing this consent freely, voluntarily and without duress. You will be asked during the process to acknowledge that you have read, understood and agree to this Informed Consent Policy and the Inagene™’s Privacy Notice.

Inagene™’s Informed Consent Policy reviews the benefits, risks and limitations of DNA testing and provides more information so that you can remain informed. It also explains how your information and DNA sample will be used after the performance of the test, the production of the report, and your counselling session, if purchased.

Your DNA sample will be destroyed once testing has been successfully completed (within a maximum of 90 days of Inagene™ receiving the test sample) unless you specifically indicate & provide consent to Inagene™ to store your DNA for future testing and research. More details are provided below.

Your genetics tell a story far deeper and more complex than hair colour or ancestry. A simple lab test from little snippets of your DNA can predict how well a variety of medications will work for you and assess your risk of dangerous side effects. Inagene™'s Personalized Insights™ test examines the smallest level of your genome—nucleotides, the building blocks of DNA. Even the tiniest change at the right place can make a huge difference, and that's what we look for. These changes/variations are called “single nucleotide polymorphisms,” or SNPs (pronounced “snips”). Some specific changes, or SNPs, have been shown to affect an entire gene, which in turn affects your body's metabolism. We explain this in more detail below.

What are Genetic Tests?

A genetic test analyses the blueprint (DNA) of living organisms to identify possible changes in the building blocks that may cause differences in the end function. Those changes can be referred to as mutations or variants, among others. Variants in those building blocks can be benign, such as causing red hair or blue eyes, or have varying degrees of pathogenicity (i.e., disease causing). There is variability in the degree of pathogenicity because it is not always clear if a specific change in the blueprint has the same result and degree of impact each time.

The following is a list of terms that you may not be familiar with and their meanings:

Deoxyribonucleic acid, or DNA, is hereditary material (material that is passed on from parents to their children) in almost all living organisms, including humans. DNA may be considered the library of the organism. It is made up of four chemical bases, and the sequence of these bases determines the information available to build the organism.

Chromosomes are packages of DNA when it is compacted in cells. Chromosomes may be considered the chapters contained within the DNA library. Chromosomes are in pairs; one set from each parent, and most humans have 23 pairs of them.

Genes are units of the DNA that code for a specific aspect of the organism. They may be considered words in the recipe books for each individual person.

Single Nucleotide Polymorphisms, or SNPs, are the most common type of variation found in the DNA; each represents a single letter difference in the 6 billion DNA letters that comprise each person and, continuing the example above, are the missing or changed ingredients in each person's recipe book. We test for only 116 “letters” in your recipe book. While these “letters” can dramatically affect how you might respond to certain medications, they cannot be used to identify who you are.

What is Inagene™’s test?

Some variants have been identified that impact how people’s bodies metabolize (i.e., process) or respond to different medications. These variants can lead to significant differences in how a particular medication affects an individual person. The study of how specific genetic changes impact response to specific medications is called pharmacogenetics, an important part of personalized, or precision, medicine.

Inagene™’s Personalized Insights™ test was developed by Inagene Diagnostics Inc. to evaluate specific changes in your DNA that are known or predicted to impact how you respond to certain medications. We test key genetic variations that predict how you might respond to different medications to help you find the best treatment for you. We are also researching several variations that may be associated with a predilection for addiction.

What benefits are there?

Information from this test can be useful in many ways, such as the potential minimization or prevention of side effects/adverse events related to a treatment, increasing the probability that treatment will be successful, minimizing trial and error of finding optimal treatment, or saving costs by identifying medications that may not work in certain consumers.

What is required for the test?

The test itself is conducted on a sample of your DNA isolated from a cheek swab. In addition, we require some personal information for administrative purposes; e.g., to be able to provide you with your results.

This information, as well as your barcoded DNA sample, will need to be sent to Inagene™ by mail for testing. Your DNA sample is barcoded in order to separate your personal information from the sample. If a test result cannot be provided from the original sample you provided, we will contact you for a new sample and provide a new swab for collection at our cost.

What results and how are they reported?

A confidential Personalized Insights™ report based on your individual genetic profile, also known as a pharmacogenetic report, will be created based on the results of your test. Inagene™ provides an online service that requires a device with internet access to view your Personalized Insights™ report. You will receive an email notifying you when your report is ready. The pharmacogenetics report will contain nine sections; which are detailed below.

Report Summary

This section presents the list of medications classified as Do Not Use together with those classified as Use With Caution based on the gene-drug interactions identified in your unique genetic profile. Simply click on each medication to view your individual recommendations.

Understanding Your Report

This section provides a how-to guide to understanding your Personalized Insights™ report, including an overview of how your results are classified and describing the various icons used throughout the report.

Quick Reference of Drug Compatibility

This section provides a high level summary of your medication recommendations sorted by generic or brand drug names, and by alphabetical order or by medication class. Simply click on each medication to view it's associated individual recommendation.

Detailed Recommendations

This section provides you with detailed individual medication recommendations (listed in alphabetical order).

Create Your Customized Report

This section allows you to create, view, and download a customized report containing only the specific medications you wish to include. Individual medications can be searched for by either generic or brand drug name.

Your Insights: Cannabis

This section provides insights on how your genetic profile might impact on your response to cannabis and cannabinoids (CBD and THC) and on the possibility of you having adverse effects from cannabis use. Importantly these recommendations are based on preliminary research data and their validity in clinical care is currently uncertain.

Your Insights: Potential Opioid Use Risk

This section provides information on whether you carry some of the gene variants that have been suggested to be associated with increased or decreased risk of developing opioid use disorder. Importantly, these associations are based on preliminary data and are for research use only.

Analysis of Your Gene Profile

This section contains a detailed list of the genes tested and the specific variants in these genes that were identified in your unique genetic profile.

Test Information

This section contains general information about the DNA sample you provided and how this sample was processed, a glossary of terms used in your report, and Inagene's customer service contact information.

Are there any limitations?

The test will look at specific variations (or “SNPs”) and not the whole DNA or gene of interest. Results will be based on those targeted variations and any changes in regions other than those targeted will not be identified nor reported.

Who should interpret the results?

Only a licensed health care professional (HCP; such as a Medical Doctor, nurse practitioner, or pharmacist) should interpret the results of the report. You should NOT implement any changes to your treatment without a medical consultation. The results of this test should always be shared with your prescribing doctor and health care team, as, when appropriately interpreted, they may impact medical/treatment decisions.

Will you keep any information about me?

Your sample and information will be kept for at least 90 days, to account for any necessary additional testing and or re-testing that may be required.

Following the above-mentioned time period, Inagene™ will archive a digital copy of your anonymous results within an encrypted and firewalled database system for 25 years, as required for compliance with regulations and recommendations by Clinical Laboratory Improvement Amendments (CLIA). CLIA is a body of international accreditors that sets standards and issues certificates for clinical laboratory testing on specimens derived from humans for the purpose of providing information for diagnosis, prevention, or treatment of diseases or impairment, and health assessments.

What happens to my DNA?

After complying with the previously mentioned minimum retention period, your DNA sample is destroyed unless you specifically consent to having your sample securely stored by Inagene™. At Inagene™, we are committed to ongoing research and discovery and by consenting to have Inagene™ store your DNA sample, you can help drive this research and discovery, which is ultimately aimed at optimizing treatment and outcomes. In addition, as Inagene™ identifies new gene-drug associations or develops new genetic tests, you may be offered the opportunity to purchase these at a discounted price in the future if your DNA has been stored. Finally, some DNA samples contain rare genetic variations, and by consenting to DNA storage we can use these samples as benchmarks to ensure the continued accuracy of our test. All of your personal information is separated from your DNA in the lab and we will never share your DNA with a third party without your consent unless required to by law. If you choose to have your sample destroyed, any new findings or information that require additional testing will not be made available to you unless you purchase a new kit and provide a new sample. New information identified by Inagene™ associated with variations that we have already tested for in your DNA sample will still be made available to you through updates to your online report.

Can I withdraw my consent after sending it?

You can withdraw your consent to the analysis at any time in full or in part without stating reasons. You can also refuse to be informed about test results. Unless released on consent, you may request the destruction of all test material and results collected.

Contact customerservice@inagene.com

If you have consented in the past and later opted out, Inagene™ might not be able to exclude your test results and data from research already performed with your prior permission, but will cease going forward.

To comply with applicable legislation and regulation, some information and documentation must be kept in accordance with such legislation and regulation.

Will my information be protected?

Your personal information and any other information we collect from or on you will not be used or disclosed by Inagene Diagnostics Inc. (Inagene™) for any other purpose unless: (a) your express and informed consent is first obtained, (b) the use, collection or disclosure is permitted or required by law, or (c) the information is rendered anonymous and used by Inagene™ solely for scientific research, planning, statistical or publication purposes in the field of genetic testing.

All of your personal information will be kept separate from your sample in order to keep it secure. Your sample will be given a specific barcode that links to your information, and the decoding of this information will only be available to specific staff, such as for validating results obtained. This information will be kept secure on an encrypted and firewall protected database with restricted access.

You can request that your results be provided directly to a health care professional you direct. Although we highly recommend that you share your report with your physician/health care team, unless you do not request this/consent to this, your information and report will not be shared with your physician/health care professional. Should you elect to have your report shared with members of your health care team, you will maintain sole responsibility for ensuring that contact information provided to Inagene™ for these individuals is accurate and current. Once your report has been released to any third parties, Inagene™ will not be responsible for preventing further sharing of the report by these third parties.
