CAIMANTM HEAD SYSTEMS

An unconventional helmet suite for unpredictable special operations

Forged with intensive, collaborative methods, Revision's Batlskin Caiman Helmet suite is a jolt to the SOF head protection status quo. Engineered for full-spectrum use—providing elite protection and performance across coastal, riverine, maritime, high-altitude, and ground maneuvers, the Caiman helmet system epitomizes Revision's forward-thinking. Real operators and key Revision partners injected real-world, hard-fought experience directly into the system.

The end-result is a truly unconventional helmet suite that reflects this radical joint effort: skeletonized, modular solutions where each component has been rigorously conceived, engineered, and tested. In the process, Revision significantly reduced the overall weight compared to currently fielded helmet systems, emphasizing scalability and mission-specific accessories for dynamic, high-octane operations. Caiman helmets were designed from the ground up, as holistic-rather-than-triage solutions, to match the complexity of modern-day missions. SOF users can feel real ownership of the end-product, knowing that their no-holds-barred demands were addressed and readdressed to the last.

"Revision upended traditional helmet development for the Caiman project: the design contributions from SOF users are undeniable."

RETHINKING HELMET DEVELOPMENT

Revision has never been content to simply repurpose and repackage an existing product. In this spirit, Revision took the Caiman development process as a challenge to think big and to realize game-changing aspirations. Every aspect of the Caiman suite was exhaustively scrutinized and trialed, systematically honing designs until they were perfected. Some elements – such as the five-size comfort fit, liners with less rigid, open-cell foam and mandible guards with the ability to swing out – reflect the combination of Revision's design ingenuity and advanced engineering with organic, real-time user feedback.
