Tips for selecting a solar power system

SOLAR Power is currently a great investment for your home and if you choose the correct solar power system, you will be making money out of it for many decades to come.

There are so many companies offering solar power these days, which one do you choose?

What do you need to look for, to ensure that you don't get taken for a ride?

Patrick Morrissey from Future Sustainability said that the following points were imperative to ensure that you purchased a system that would stand the test of time.

► Ensure you know and recognise the brand name of your solar power panels and ensure the company backing your solar warranties is a name you know and trust to be around for the full length of your warranty.

► You need to be shown real financial modelling on what you can expect your solar power system to do for you, based on your current electricity consumption – this is a requirement of all solar companies but many may not do this for you.

► Ensure the company you're dealing with is at least a BCSE accredited installer, a master builder, and a member of the Clean Energy Council.

Future Sustainability offer Hyundai solar power panels paired with Italian Power One Inverters.

Shutters withstand cyclones

LEADING Australian screen manufacturer, Superior Screens, has launched a new product designed to withstand even the harshest local conditions – including a category five cyclone.

While the market has had domestic shutters available with cyclone ratings as high as three, architects, property developers and home owners have long complained that this is not enough in a country that is known for some of the harshest, and most extreme, weather conditions in the world.

Superior Screens has launched Superior Shutters C5 which has been certified to withstand even the toughest local conditions including a category five cyclone up to wind speeds of 285km/hr.

Company general manager, Rita Turnour says Australia has needed a product specifically designed for its unique weather conditions.

"It has been clear to everyone in the industry that many of the shutters available on the market would not be able to withstand the kind of weather we have here in Australia. Our sun is incredibly harsh and, in many parts, a category three cyclone rating would not stand up to some of our big winds.

All fixings are made from marine grade stainless steel attracting a full two year warranty on the shutters.

The safe way to detect water temperature

Powered simply by the water flow itself, there has never been a safer and easier way to manage your shower temperature.

Scalding hot or freezing cold water from your shower is not only unpleasant but it can also present a real danger to your most vulnerable family members. You can avoid wasting water and time by taking the guesswork out of reaching the perfect temperature. Not only will all the family benefit from this convenience but it ensures an effective safety measure for those in your family at risk from scalding.

NeoFlow have developed an innovative and safe technology to show the temperature of the water through coloured LEDs. You simply switch on your taps to start the water flow and your NeoFlow shower head will light up to show you the temperature.
