A Short Burst of Relevance

וְהָיָה חַיִּיךָ תְּלָאִים לְךָ מִנְּגֵד וּפְחָדָת לַיְלָה וַיּוֹמָם...

The life you face shall be precarious; you shall be in terror, night and day...

THE CHASSIDIC MASTERS were fond of interpreting the terrible curses of the Tochecha in a positive way. When the tzaddikim finished with their derashos, the curses emerged to in fact carry the greatest blessings. One such example is the following teaching from the Degel Machaneh Ephraim, in which the tzaddik explains the words, "The life you face shall be precarious; you shall be in terror, night and day." At the very outset of Shulchan Aruch, the Rama writes that the verse, "Shivisi Hashem l'negdi samid", "I have placed Hashem before me at all times", embodies the lifestyle of the tzaddikim who live their lives with great yiras Shamayim founded upon the constant awareness of Hashem's presence. Rav Avigdor Miller zt"l once likened this overwhelming feeling of awe to a daredevil driver who becomes aware of a police car behind him. The realness of the police officer and the consequences of illegal driving are enough to cause him to slow down and keep the rules. In the same way (although the mashal is certainly limited), the tzaddikim are constantly aware of Hashem's realness, of His presence in the world and the way He sees all our actions. This - in addition to their great love for Hashem and their striving never to act in a way that would be detrimental to their intimate relationship with Him - enables the tzaddikim to live elevated lives within the lofty boundaries of the Torah's ideals. The holy Degel uses this concept to explain our pasuk in a deeper way: "V'hayu chayecha": And the Source of your life-force, Hashem, "teluyim lecha m'neged": will be the subject of your constant awareness, as the pasuk states, "Shivisi Hashem l'negdi samid." Then, "Ufachad'ta Laylah v'yomam": you will attain a lofty level of yiras Shomayim, enabling you to live a life of elevation and closeness to Hashem. Is there any greater blessing than this? 🤴

Parsha Roundup

A 60-second Review

- 🤴 Moshe communicates the mitzvah of Bikkurim - upon entering the Holy Land, the first-ripened fruits must be brought to the Beis HaMikdash and one must express one's gratitude to Hashem.
- 🤴 Ki Savo includes the laws of the different kinds of Maasar as well as detailed instructions on how to proclaim the blessings and the curses on Har Gerizim and Har Eival. Moshe reminds the nation that they are Hashem's chosen people, and that they, in turn, have chosen to serve Hashem.
- 🤴 After listing the blessings with which Hashem will reward the Jewish nation when they follow the laws of the Torah, Moshe delivers the "Tochecha", a long, harsh account of the tragedies that shall befall them if they abandon Hashem's commandments.

A Quick Mayseh

A Story to Warm the Heart

ONE TIME, THE holy Berditchover Rav was walking down the street when he bumped into a well-known heretic. This was a man who was well-known for his many sins, and he had the reputation of a scoundrel, a cruel and wicked man. As the tzaddik passed, he stopped suddenly and gave this man a warm and hearty greeting. To the great shock of this heretic, Rav Levi Yitzchak grabbed him by the lapels of his coat and cried out, "I am so jealous of you!"

Nothing could have surprised the man more. "You, Rebbe?" he said, dumbfounded. "You are jealous of me?!"

"Yes!" cried the Berditchover. "I know you have spent many years entrenched in sin. But our Sages taught that when a Jew repents out of love, his willful transgressions are transformed into merits. Now, if you consider how many sins you must have committed over the decades, just think of how many merits you will have when you repent!"

"If that's the case," the man retorted, "just wait a few more days, and you will be even more jealous of me!"

But despite his callous bravado, the Rebbe's sincere words and warm demeanor worked their magic, and the man repented. He eventually became one of the most pious Jews in all of Berditchover.

No matter how severely entrenched in sin and lowliness we may be, teshuvah remains an ever-present option. It is in our hands to transform all of our sins into the greatest merits! What a privilege! What a gift! 🤴

Tasting the Depth of Shabbos Kodesh

LAST WEEK, WE spoke about the incredible power of Shabbos to cleanse a person with a “Tal shel techiya”, a life-giving dew of spiritual renewal. But what about the week of a person who has merited to experience the cleansing waters of the mikvah that is Shabbos Kodesh? The Chernovitzer quotes a famous teaching from Chazal which states, “If am Yisrael were to keep two Shabbaos, they would immediately be redeemed.” The tzaddik explains that the first three days of the week, Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, draw their life force from the previous Shabbos while the final three days, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, draw their life force from the following Shabbos. If a Jew truly taps into the holiness of Shabbos, this will positively influence the first half of the week and cause spiritual illumination from the coming Shabbos to elevate the second half of the week as well. This illumination of the mundane week with the brilliant light of Shabbos is the light of the redemption, a time when the physical illusion of our world will be ripped away to reveal the spiritual coding - bursting with Hashem’s presence - behind each and every molecule of existence. Kabbalistically speaking, the first of the two Shabbosim represents the Sefirah of Binah (Source) while the second Shabbos represents the final Sefirah of Malchus (Vessel). When the six days of the week, which represent the six intermediary emotional Sefiros from Chessed to Yesod are purified and activated to serve as a channel linking the first and second Shabbosim, Binah and Malchus, this brings a spirit of redemption into the world. This redemption is rooted in Binah, whose fifty gates correlate to the fiftieth year of Yovel in which all indentured servants are granted their freedom. 🕎

P’nimiyus Ha’Halacha

The Inner Dimension of Jewish Law

CONTINUING OUR OVERVIEW of some of the halachos regarding the blowing of the shofar on Rosh Hashana, let’s discuss who is obligated in this mitzvah. Because it is a time-bound commandment, only men are obligated in the mitzvah. However, although officially exempt from hearing the shofar, almost all women make a practice of fulfilling this mitzvah voluntarily. Whether or not a woman who chooses to fulfil the mitzvah of hearing shofar makes a beracha is a subject of dispute between the Ashkenazi and Sephardi poskim with regard to all similar cases. The Rambam (Hilchos Tzitzit 3:9 and Hilchos Sukkah 6:13) holds that because women are exempt from the mitzvah of Tzitzis, they cannot make a Beracha on it. The Maggid Mishna explains that the Rambam holds it is impossible to say, “V’tzivanu”, “Who commanded us,” if a person is in fact exempt from the mitzvah. However, the Raavad (Hilchos Tzitzis 3:9) and Tosfos (Eruvin 96a, Rosh Hashanah 33a, Kiddushin 31a) argue that women may opt to recite a beracha even over mitzvos from which they are exempt. Shulchan Aruch (O”C 589:6) follows the opinion of the Rambam, while the Rama (O”C 17:2) accepts that of Rabbenu Tam. Therefore, Ashkenazim hold that a woman or one blowing shofar only for women may recite the beracha, while Sephardim hold that neither a woman nor someone blowing for women may recite the beracha. A child who reached the age of chinuch should hear the shofar being blown. According to Sephardi poskim, he can even fulfill his obligation by blowing shofar himself.

The tzaddikim explain that the different kinds of Shofar blasts - tekiya, shevarim, teruah, tekiyah gedolah - contain deep allusions to the process of teshuvah. The straight and steady tekiyah blast symbolizes the purity and untainted innocence of a childhood., a time when life was simpler and the yetzer hara hadn’t yet taken hold. As life proceeds, we soon experience “shevarim”, the brokenness of the human condition. As the forces of material selfishness and spiritual altruism battle within for our very identity, we experience failure, lowliness, and defeat. Eventually, teruah, our spirit becomes shattered into shards of hopelessness. As the burden of our sins becomes more and more difficult to carry, we collapse under the weight of our inner demons, defeated by the illusion of the insurmountable barriers before us. The bright light of our idealism is dimmed by the shadow of a dismal reality, visions of a broken world drowning in confusion and despair. We give up trying, disgusted by our failed efforts to return to the innocence, faith, wonder, and vibrancy of our youth.

But then, somewhere along the way, we hear the redemptive echo of the shofar. From the depths of our slumber we are reminded of Hashem’s endless mercy, His ever-present desire for us to utilize this world - with all of its challenge, struggle, and failure - to forge an intimate bond with Him. We recognize the miracle of life and the breaths we take as being breathed into us by our loving Father in heaven Who consciously chooses, each and every moment, to grant us this gift in His belief in our ability to repair what we have broken and return to our truest state of being. The tekiyah gedolah is twice as long as the tekiya because it demonstrates how all of the brokenness of the shevarim and teruah were also part and parcel of the journey toward elevation and a spiritual perspective that simply couldn’t be accessed any other way. This Rosh Hashana, may we merit to a shofar blowing that rouses us to the ever-present hope of total rectification, a kind of teshuvah that reframes the errors of the past and lifts us back into the loving embrace of our Father in heaven. 🕎
