Joseph Smith Fought Polygamy
Is to Be Continued

This present volume documents the story of Joseph's struggle to keep polygamy out of the Church up to the summer months of 1842, but there is much more important information concerning the problem as it transpired after that date. During the two years that preceded Joseph's death, he continued his efforts—ever trying to eradicate the doctrine and practice. Eight years after Joseph's death Brigham Young and his polygamous associates made polygamy a cardinal doctrine by falsely declaring that Joseph had received a revelation commanding its practice. There is much evidence that Joseph gave no such revelation, and that the instituting of the dogma was a fraudulent act upon the part of the Mormon Church leaders, who were themselves the instigators.

Further information on this subject is being published serially in the Vision magazine, which is available from Price Publishing Company, 915 E. 23rd. St., Independence, MO 64055. It is planned that this additional material will be compiled in future volumes.
