

Surface Material

The High Pressure Laminate (HPL) surface used for our table tops is a Melamine-Urea-Formaldehyde Impregnated Paper which is also known as Melamine Paper. Considered to be one of the most durable and decorative surface materials available, HPL is abrasion, corrosion, and fire resistant. Using a combination of high pressure, heat, and a quality resin, the surface is bonded to the core material creating a long lasting, beautiful table top.

Core Material

The homogeneous particleboard used inside of our desks are manufactured from wood branches and surplus wood material. This ensures our manufacturing facilities utilizes as much of the raw product as possible, minimizing waste. An Amino Resin is used as a binding agent before the material is pressed and extruded into the appropriate shape. The core material provides high sound absorption, requires minimal adhesive, and has an E0 formaldehyde release classification, a release amount less than 0.5mg/L.

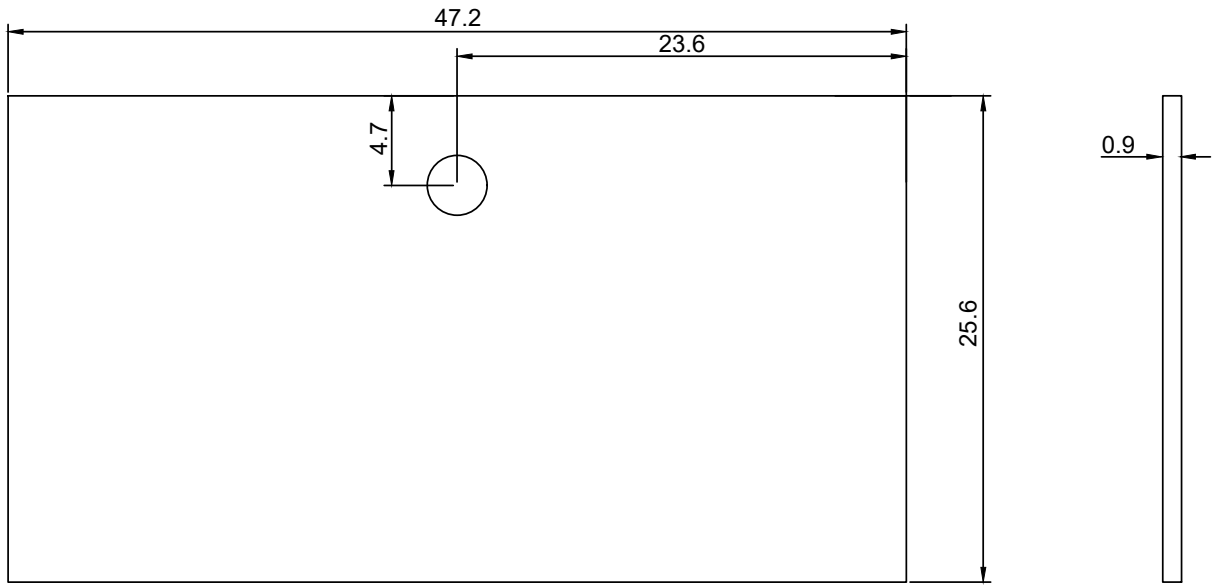

Edge Material

The edge band of the table tops utilizes the lightweight, flexible, and strong properties of Polyvinyl Chloride (PVC). Using a combination of heat and adhesives, the strong edge is added to ensure longevity and high durability with our table tops.
