GO FURTHER

Let's go parents! Engage with the activity and support your children's musical exploration, you can provide them with some additional suggestions and resources:

Musical Jam Sessions: Join in on the fun by organizing family jam sessions. BYO musical instruments or create your own with cardboard alongside your children. This interactive experience will not only strengthen the parent-child bond but also create lasting memories.

DIY Music Lessons: Take the opportunity to delve deeper into music by offering mini music lessons to your children. Explore the basics of rhythm, melody, or even teach them a simple song on their homemade instruments.

Musical Storytelling: Combine music with storytelling! Ask your children to create a musical instrument that represents a character or a specific scene from their favorite storybook. Then, have them narrate the story while using their instrument to create sound effects or background music.

Research Musical Instruments: Explore different musical instruments with your children. Encourage them to watch videos, read books, or visit online resources to learn about various instruments from around the world. This research can inspire children to create even more diverse and unique cardboard instruments.
