Pelvic Floor

If you accidentally leak urine when you laugh, cough or exercise you may be suffering from stress incontinence which could be caused by weak pelvic floor muscles. It is possible to regain control if you exercise and strengthen your pelvic floor.

Although you can do Kegel exercise on your own without any tools, Kegel balls are helpful as they do not require any concentration or forethought - no need to count sets or seconds.

Designed to help improve your pelvic floor muscle, Nalone's Kegel balls directly stimulate the Kegel muscle, which is especially helpful for those who have difficulty isolating their own Kegel muscle, which can significantly reduce any benefit.

The specially weighted 4-ball Yany exerciser has a regime designed to strengthen the Kegel muscle whilst those with a shortened vagina will find the single ball option a more comfortable fit.

For a more advanced experience, the powered Miu Miu Kegel delivers both a set programme as well as individual control mode using the remote feature.
