

“Truth never damages a cause that is just.”
- Mahatma Gandhi

Honesty means always telling the truth, even when it’s hard to do. Being honest means you will not lie, steal, or deceive in any way, and in turn, people will trust and respect you. When you have something important to say, let Parker’s Honesty Pocket Power remind you to speak genuinely and sincerely.

Honesty is an important value to have to be a trustworthy friend. When you have to admit something that you did wrong, or say something unpleasant, it may feel easier to lie at first, but telling the truth will save you much anguish later, and you will gain the respect of others. Here are some ways to be honest:

When telling a story, stay truthful to the facts so people will believe what you are saying.

If someone tells you a secret, do not share it with anyone else (unless it’s dangerous, then share it with an adult that you trust).

Be a loyal friend by standing up for those who need you, especially if they are being treated unfairly.

Stand up to cheating. Everyone should have an equal chance to win or lose.

Sometimes it is better to keep opinions and thoughts to yourself if they will hurt someone’s feelings; being honest doesn’t mean you have to share everything.

Take responsibility for your actions. If you can’t share what you have done, think twice before doing it.

how will you be honest?
