REPURPOSING

How many of us have pieces of jewellery that we do not wear sitting in our drawers? Either fashion has changed, it doesn't fit anymore or we have inherited something that (although we love the sentimentality) we do not like the design!

Here is a chance to create something that you will love out of those pieces that have not seen the light of day for a while. By sitting down and talking through what you want to wear, the lifestyle you have today and the how you want to move forward we can come to a design that you will love and treasure and then pass on yourself to the next generation.

Using the whole of the item including any stones and metal ensures that any story that has come with the piece is kept and then retold.

RE-IMAGINED WITH LOVE

Here are a few examples of our many success stories, reigniting a love for those pieces that are special to you and yours. Get in touch with Annakin and let's bring your ideas to life.

A customer had 3 rings left to her by the 3 most inspiring women in her life, her grandmother, her mother and her mother-in-law., one of which had some sapphire in them as well. A story for later! She wanted to celebrate their lives and what they meant to her growing up and long after they were gone. We created a beautiful pendant necklace, retaining the stunning character of the diamonds with a wonderfully contemporary touch.

A beautiful platinum stick pin with 4 diamonds and a pearl that was never worn was reimagined into a modern cushion set platinum ring. The pearl was also reused in a different piece and this ring is now a permanent fixture on the customer's hand.

This commission was a very personal one for Anna as it was for her daughter. She had inherited her grandmother's engagement ring which contained 5 graduating Diamonds, with the central one missing. The shank had become so thin that it snapped and would need a lot of building up to be wearable again. Her daughter wanted a moon and so a 7 diamond Moon was designed with the 2 extra stones being bought by her siblings. She was so thrilled and moved that this gift had become so much more than a single family heirloom but now a cross generational one that she could give to her own child in the future with an amazing story. She also wears it every day!

Could you imagine having been given two sets of diamond studs of different sizes and losing one stud from each pair? Well, that is what happened to my next customer who was now left with two random sized diamonds and nothing to do with them. The Double Diamond Twist was designed and now they sit perfectly side by side almost as though they were always meant to be.

A gift from a customer's parents on her 18th was a recent commission. She wanted to create a contemporary ring for herself and also to use some of the stones to create a ring for own daughters up and coming 18th. I love a good story and this was a great one!

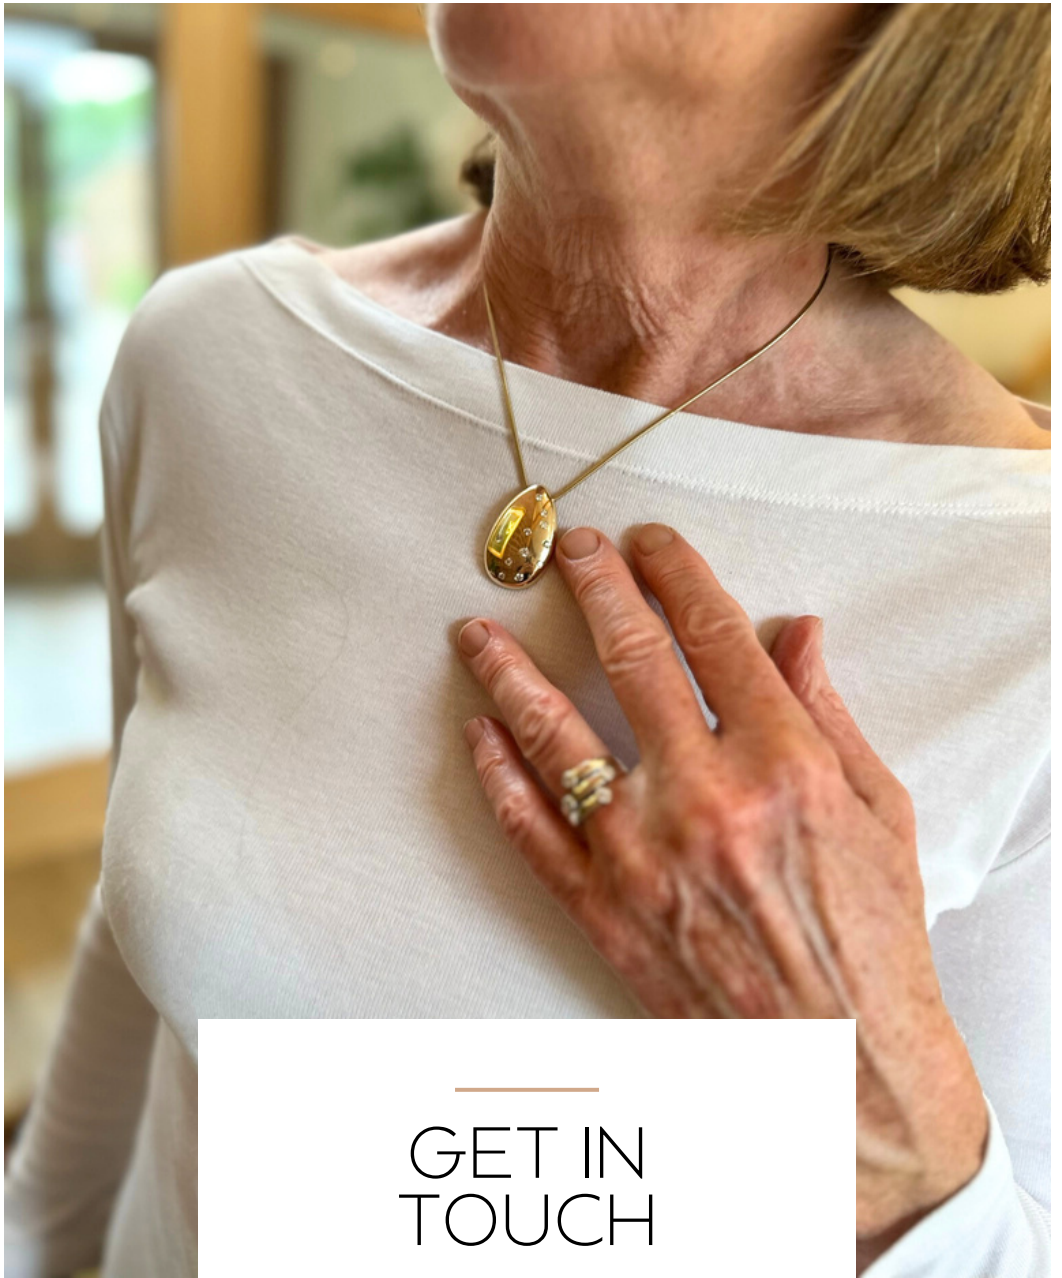

Before

After

The most beautiful gift but unworn and to be honest, a little clunky. This was a commission involving an unusual stone, a green sapphire and quite a lot of diamonds of which there are still some to use. The wish was to have a piece of jewellery, equally beautiful but a little more wearable.
