What's it been like to keep going this year? What have been the challenges, successes, best parts, worst parts?

The entire hospitality industry in Nashville has been impacted this year and we're no exception. Fortunately, we've been able to provide a bit of Southern comfort that can be enjoyed at home during these trying times with our retail products like Biscuit Mix and Preserves. Our team has also worked to find new ways to meet the needs of our customers— we've added an outdoor dining area, launched Heat n' Eat biscuits, opened a drive-thru next door called Biscuit Kitchen, and expanded our to-go program!

What are you hopeful about? What are you looking forward to in 2021 and beyond?

"The thing we are most hopeful about is that the 12 chicks we bought early in the pandemic will start laying some eggs... and that they aren't roosters! Beyond that, we are looking forward to loosening the reins on the business a little, pursuing a personal goal in the process and planning packaging for a new fancy product."

MAKING DURING A PANDEMIC

Life has been anything but normal for anyone since March and we hear that time and again from our maker community - the great, ambitious people working hard to bring you all those awesome items for gifts and treats.

But what was true before the pandemic is still true during it: makers gonna make.

While the effects of COVID-19 on small businesses are large (by some estimates, 100,000 small businesses have closed for good), we wanted to hear from our purveyors what it's been like to keep on keeping on this year.

What's it been like to keep going this year?

Eileen and James Ray, Little Seed Farm

"As a farm, we have to operate 7 days a week, 365 days a year, no matter what's going on around us. For us that's meant everything from operating with fewer people, hiring more people, distancing work spaces, and staggering work hours. The most difficult aspect is maintaining all of the precautions, such as masks, distancing, sanitization, etc. Overall, online demand for Beauty and Personal Care products has increased, so we've been fortunate to be in a position as an Essential Business that has not experienced a decline in sales. We've used that circumstance to give back to our local communities and will have donated over $75,000 in cash and product to a variety of causes by the end of the 2020."

Clay Maddox, Nashville Heat

"For us, the initial challenge of adjusting to retail business shutdowns was and still is the biggest issue. It is hard to grow during a lockdown. Just finding new ways to get to consumers and seeing some of our restaurant partners limit or cease their business has been harsh. We are grateful to have seen our product incorporated into larger gift packages as companies and retailers adjust to different means of getting brands and products to consumers, and that has been just one of the things about being a local business that has been positive about 2020. Everybody is in this mess together, so supporting our neighbors and other local businesses has been the light shining through the darkness."

What's it been like to keep going this year?

"In a landscape where many businesses have closed their doors, Trailhead remains open for business. We owe this partly to luck. The other bigger part is our customers and their loyalty. To them we say, "Thank you!" in the most heartfelt way I can articulate. As I pause and think about it, nevermind the pandemic for the moment, it shows great trust to have our coffees on your countertop awaiting the morning. We are grateful for this trust in your morning ritual as it impacts the whole day. The worst part is bearing witness and being impacted by cafes who are either running a minimal to-go shop or those who have closed."

What's it been like to keep going this year?

"Virtually all of our traditional brick and mortar customers either shut down completely or scaled way back. Fortunately, we had a good presence with e-commerce based customers and they have filled in most of the gaps. I'd like to give a big shout out to Tennessee Crossroads for airing our Willa's Shortbread episode just before Mother's Day! That kept our website hopping for sure. As for the Holiday season, all our retail shows have been canceled although several are doing on-line versions....we'll see how those go. Simple fact is we really don't know how to plan for Holiday business this year. We'll just have to do the best we can."

THE HOPE FOR THE FUTURE

At their core, entrepreneurs and small businesses owners are optimistic and hopeful. We have to be. After all, we've decided to start and build something that we believe will grow. We are gardeners, ever worried about our precious crop, fertilizing the soil and watering our seeds, knowing that tomorrow will be better than today.

At Batch, we know this is true because our makers tell us that despite a global pandemic and a trying year, they still have hope. In fact, many of them have more hope now than six months ago.

What gives you hope and keeps you going?

Tracey T. Richardson, Lillie's of Charleston

"We are excited about broadening awareness of our products all over the country. The discovery of new outlets to gain wider distribution to so many independent retailers. For 2021 and beyond, we are looking forward to gathering together again with family & friends, meeting customers in person and being able to do tastings & events!"

Ingrid Chrisco, True North Granola

"There will be silver linings emerging from this pandemic, yet the tragedy of the growing human loss is beyond our comprehension and understanding. As long as family members, friends, colleagues and our wider community are safe, we know we will move through this. These silver linings will center on building community and recognizing how important this is to our physical and emotional well-being. We continue to work hard to build strong relationships with our customers and greatly value their support for our small business. Both new and returning customers share their appreciation for us and our products, our mission and values. We assume that online orders will continue to increase given the growing number of new customers, yet it is also very important for us to grow our wholesale accounts. Again, Batch is helping to increase this growth, and for that we are so very grateful."

THE CHALLENGE OF 2020

Our makers are deeply invested in and rely on their local communities. That's why when you buy a gift with Batch, you're making a statement. That message isn't just that you easily found some of the best stuff from a given city, but that you want your purchasing power to keep powering local communities. When you spend $100 at a small business, $68 of that stays and is reinvested in that community. (Only $43 of what you spend at a national chain stays local.)

While the effects of COVID-19 on small businesses are large (by some estimates, 100,000 small businesses have closed for good), we wanted to hear from our purveyors what it's been like to keep on keeping on this year.

What have been the challenges, successes, best parts, worst parts?

Nadia Elhaj, Cornucopia

"The support of our local community, even my son's PTA, as well as national corporate orders have kept us going strong this year. We have spent time focusing on how the business can best support the hard working staff, the heart of the business, as well as the loyal customers and the community at large. I am hopeful that the pause in the norm will allow people time and space to reflect on how things can be done differently, and how we can all be better to each other. We are grateful for relationships, like the one we have had with Batch for years now- that also aids us in keeping Cornucopia afloat and prospering during the holiday season ahead."

Kristin Walker, Walker Feed Co.

"We know a lot more about the virus now than we did in March. There's less stigma, and therefore I feel confident that we will be able to adapt to a new way of thinking and living and get people back out. While things will look different when it comes to large trade shows and events, there will be new ways to connect with buyers that should prove to be more cost effective and efficient for small businesses. Nothing can replace a warm handshake or face to face, or the reaction to a taste of one of our products. But we have grown our business when many had to completely shut down and I am confident that we can continue doing what we do and bring more products to market."
