"Jason Vass Gallery exhibits Body Language by artist Douglas Tausik Ryder from Sept 7 - Oct 19 (1452 E. Sixth Street, Los Angeles) with an opening reception on September 7 from 5 - 8 p.m.

"Woodworking goes digital as Douglas Tausik Ryder's sculptural works exist both as digital data and in dimensional forms that connect technology to tradition. Technological advancement has always been at the center of art-making but never more so than today.

"His technology-assisted art making responds to the digital age through a pioneering creative process, which delivers expressive, crafted forms.

Hosted by Jason Vass

"Since the beginning of his career, Tausik Ryder has produced work that explores the limits of technology assisted art-making with a pioneering body of work that dates back to 1992, including paintings that deployed billboard printing technology, which he further overpainted – evidence of his long preoccupation to master emerging technologies in service of a creative vision.

"The Body Language sculptures in their abstract forms negotiate a deft conversation between the biomorphic and the geometric with one figure spawning the next, delivering a formal and ever-evolving consistency.

"The loosely referential shapes evoke an almost mythical organic presence that is universal to all humanity and if shared in the right way offers opportunities for generosity, connectedness and hope.
