KEHINDÉ WILEY

Portrait artist Kehinde Wiley’s canvases revolutionize art history’s canon. Portrayed in grandiose poses reminiscent of the subjects of the Old Masters, the contemporary young people of color he paints assume positions of power, challenging the biases built into much of Western art.

Soon after graduating with an MFA in art from Yale in 2001, Los Angeles-born Wiley relocated to Harlem to take up an artist-in-residence program. While walking the street there he found the mugshot of a young black man on the ground, which inspired him to paint other young black men into a more privileged context. He began photographing men in Harlem, asking them to strike classical poses; Wiley then painted them—wearing their own modern clothing—the way artists like Titian or Thomas Gainsborough might have done, triumphantly astride a rearing horse, resplendent on a divan or, most famously, posing in front of lush greenery and flowers. He later expanded his focus to include men and women from international cities like Mumbai, Senegal, Dakar, and Rio de Janeiro, and painted famous black musicians like Ice T and Michael Jackson.

In 2017, Wiley received an important commission: the presidential portrait of former U.S. president Barack Obama. The resulting painting, unveiled in 2018, portrayed Obama in front of a wall of leaves and flowers. Like all of Wiley’s work, it’s full of references to historical art. Looking back to medieval times when most people couldn’t read, painters would work flowers into artwork to communicate specific symbolic meanings—Wiley does the same here, with chrysanthemums representing Obama’s hometown of Chicago and rosebuds symbolizing love and courage. Both flowers appear in Wiley’s cocktail, which references his penchant for botanical metaphor.

The Kehinde Wiley

3 oz [90 ml] gin
1 1/2 oz cucumber juice
1 1/2 Tbsp fresh lime juice
3 dashes rosewater
Fresh basil, for garnish
Edible flowers, such as miniature roses, chrysanthemums

Combine all ingredients plus 1 1/2 oz of basil syrup in a shaker full of ice. Shake until chilled and strain into a cocktail glass. Garnish liberally with fresh basil, miniature roses, and miniature chrysanthemums.
