Turquoise is one of the oldest known gemstones. Its appeal transcends cultures as it has been used all over the world. Here in the United States, it is best known as the quintessential stone of the Southwest. The appearance of the stones is highly variable, with blues that evoke the heavens on a clear June day and copper greens like the Statue of Liberty. Running throughout are unique whorls and speckles that give each piece its own distinct personality, as individual as the people who wear them.

The French Riviera evokes imagery of vibrant outdoor markets, old world architecture, and the sparkling turquoise waters of the Mediterranean Sea. Nestled at the foot of the Alps, Nice is known for its unusual, rocky beaches. The stones that make up the beach are called galets, which are smooth due to centuries in the Var and Paillon rivers and are like nothing you've ever seen. Many are decorated with streaks and swirls by ancient sands, which give them a beautiful and modern aesthetic.

Nessa uses stones taken straight from nature with all their inclusions and flaws, which is what makes them so beautiful. These complex forms are enhanced with inset sparkling diamonds and other precious gems.

"In this age of perfectly filtered photos on social media showcasing your aspirational lifestyle, the boldest statement you can make is —
This is me and I'm not perfect."

Iceland is a country where the landscape and nature is mesmerizing; around every bend in the road is a vista more beautiful than the last. From the glacier-capped mountains soaring over fields of purple flowers to the aurora borealis shimmering in the endless night sky. From the thundering waterfalls to the perfect tranquility of a shockingly blue hot spring pool. These pieces were inspired particularly by the “black diamond” beaches, where gems of glacial ice, frozen for hundreds of years, glitter and sparkle in the sun as they melt into the black lava sands.
