

A Typical Teaching Week

These guidelines are intended to help bring some predictability to lesson planning. Although the elements of grammar are important aspects of this course, its primary focus is writing and rhetoric. We recommend that you teach a simple, but rich, grammar curriculum in parallel with the lessons in Writing & Rhetoric: Refutation & Confirmation. By simple, we mean to suggest that you avoid a grammar program with a writing component. Two different writing methods would most likely work against each other and cause an imbalance in the school day. Instead, look for a grammar program that focuses on grammatical concepts, that provides plenty of practice sentences, and that encourages diagramming.

Teachers, you may want to provide same-day grammar instruction several days a week, preferably separating Writing & Rhetoric from grammar study by several hours. Or, you may want to alternate weeks between a grammar program and Writing & Rhetoric. This requires some negotiation in your language arts program for the year. If you aim to do two Writing & Rhetoric books per school year, that would equal approximately twenty-five lessons. If you spend one week on each lesson, that leaves you with approximately ten weeks to focus on grammar. You will have to choose a grammar program based on the needs you observe in your students.

Day One

1. The teacher models fluency by reading the text aloud while students follow along silently.
2. “Tell It Back” (Narration) and “Talk About It” should immediately follow the reading of the text, while the story is still fresh in the students’ minds. “Talk About It” is designed to help students analyze the meaning of texts and to see analogous situations, both in the world and in their own lives. Narration, the process of “telling back,” can be done in pairs or by selecting individuals to narrate to the entire class. Solo students can tell back the story into a recording device or to an instructor. The process of narration is intended to improve comprehension and long-term memory.

Days Two and Three

1. Optional: The teacher can appoint a student to read the text again to the class or pair students to reread it independently.
2. Students work with the text through the “Go Deeper” and “Writing Time” exercises. “Go Deeper” is all about building vocabulary and understanding the nuances of the text better. “Writing Time” includes sentence play, copiousness, and the refutation or confirmation exercises themselves. You will probably want to take more than one day for this step.

Day Four

1. Rather than going directly to revision, we recommend that students take a breather from their essays for a day while they work on their speaking skills. Keeping a day between essay completion and revision helps students to look at their work with fresh eyes.
2. The “Speak It” section creates opportunities for students to memorize, recite, play word games, and playact. Please consider using a recording device whenever it suits the situation. When using electronics, the student should listen to his recording to get an idea of what

1. sounds right and what needs to be improved. Have students read the elocution instructions to help them work on skill in delivery.

Day Five

At this level, students will take an important step toward revision. The first several lessons in this book provide basic exercises that introduce students to revision. Later in the book, the lessons provide a self-editing checklist that covers some of the most important aspects of improving an essay. Most students can do rudimentary self-editing at this age and provide some useful feedback to each other. However, teachers are still the best source for giving editorial feedback and requesting rewrites.
