

Helmeted Guineafowl

The helmeted guineafowl is a medium sized ground bird that lives across South Africa from the grassy fields of the Kruger National park to the city streets of Cape Town, forming flocks of close to 25 birds. These birds have round gray-black spangles bodies and small featherless heads decorated with a brown bony knob (helmet), they also have red and blue flaps on their face. These birds prefer to walk rather than fly, spending most of their day scratching in the grass and soils for everything from insects and snails to seeds and fruits.
