One of the many benefits to installing a glue-down LVT system as opposed to click-lock is the freedom it brings to create different looks and finishes through experimenting with colours, formations and patterns.

“In commercial spaces, interior designers get really creative with different designs and colours of carpet tiles but are more reluctant to do so with LVT. We want to change that; there’s endless design possibilities to work with.”

Ayesha Attah – Showroom Consultant

More often than not, customers choose to install a singular colour in one format throughout their scheme for a sharp, clean and consistent finish. However, there are benefits to mixing and matching different colours and formats in one scheme, such as opening up tighter spaces, creating specific break out areas in an open plan space and more importantly, injecting a bit of personality and fun into designs.

Most designers create spaces which respect the architecture in their environment, considering angles, lines, lighting and space. Creating lines in design can be the most powerful and clever solution to opening up enclosed spaces by leading the eye in one direction rather than focusing on one specific area. Routinely, chevron profiles have been used to solve this problem, however the chevron design can be quite overwhelming in larger areas, for example in corridors. By alternating colours in the chevron, or colour blocking through the design, the eye is still lead by the parallel lines, but isn’t overwhelmed by the repeating pattern.

In larger spaces which have multiple purposes, such as in the workplace or in open-plan residential projects, flooring can be used to section off areas for specific tasks. For example, in a workplace environments where there is likely to be quieter working areas, break out seating, banks of desks and meeting rooms on the same floor plan, different colours can be used to create blocks. The advantage of sectioning areas using flooring, rather than partitions, walls or drapes is that it keeps the space open and flowing but with the subtle zoning on the floor.

Traditionally, feature strips have been used around the base of staircases or around the edges of rooms as a means of framing, but they can also be used to break up spaces when moving from one design to another. By using feature strips to break up spaces, it allows you to maintain continuity of one colour whilst alternating format.

Inspired by Italy, the Vero collection has been designed with luxury in mind. Pairing the smaller-sized planks with our signature TrueGrain registered embossing, the Vero collection is perfect for creating style and symmetry in interior design. With a 36 PTV rating and a waterproof finish, our Vero LVT is the ideal choice for use in areas with heavy footfall.

The possibilities are endless with our versatile Vero collection

Vero Chevron laid in a soldier pattern using PLF7104GC Venice and PLF7108GC Catania

Vero has a considered colour-palette, based on trending colours in both commercial and residential settings from the white-washed Florence through the warming natural tones of the Pompeii and Sorrento colours to the more daring charcoal Tuscany, giving you the perfect spectrum to work with.

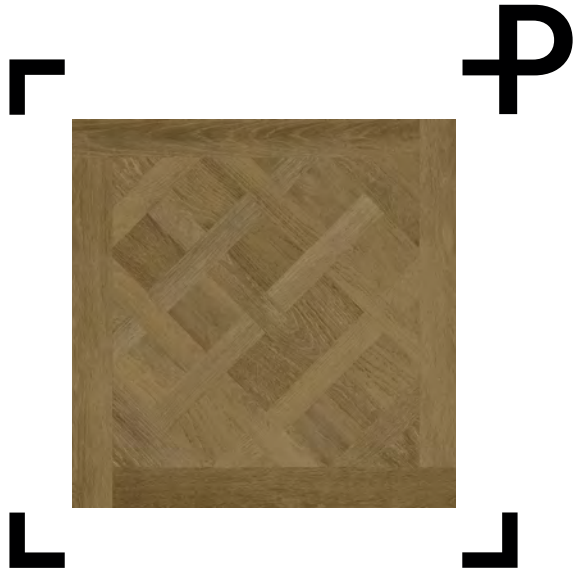

Versailles looks at home in European base

Case Study: PlusFloor Versailles panel in Mindspace Warsaw. One of our most stunning Versailles projects to date.

PlusFloor was delighted to be part of the recently launched Mindspace Skyliner co-working space, situated within the exclusive 42-floor Skyliner building in central Warsaw, Poland. This new location offers state-of-the-art technology, phenomenal city views and comprises 4,400m² of beautifully designed private offices, boutique meeting rooms, and luxury design lounge areas.

It was a privilege to partner with the amazing Mindspace design and property team who selected our luxurious glue-down, single-format LVT Versailles panel for all lounge and collaboration spaces throughout.

LoopBack

We support circular economy and want to reduce our environmental impact wherever we can through our innovation and processes.

We understand that carpet tiles in commercial environments can often have short downtime with tastes and interior trends constantly evolving, but our carpet tiles have a commercial warranty of at least 10 years and we want them to reach their end-of-life before they are recycled.

We can collect and uplift on-site, used carpet tiles and provide you with a LoopBack certificate. We manually sort through and re-grade all carpet tiles, ensuring that 'second life is first choice'; all residual is then recycled.

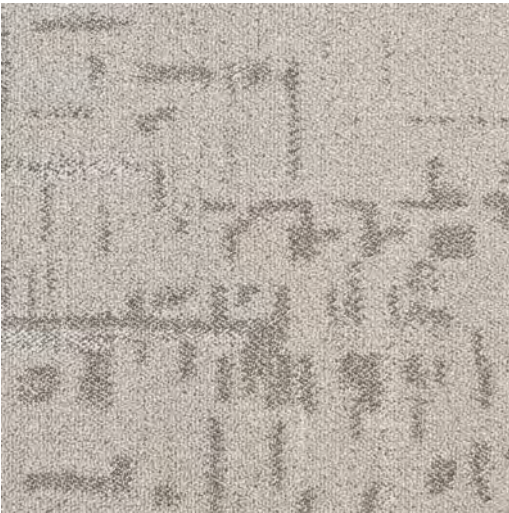

A large percentage of our carpet tiles are forwarded on to social housing tenants and other low-income households to provide low-cost comfort and insulation. We guarantee that none of the carpet tiles we recycle are incinerated or sent to landfill.
