Create a relaxing atmosphere at home with Snug Scent

With the dark season quickly approaching, finding ways to uplift your mood and create a relaxing atmosphere at home is more important than ever. Essential oils can be a great solution for this. Not only do they smell exquisite, but they can also provide therapeutic benefits.

Snug Scent founders Rita and Mode had always been passionate about aromatherapy. Rita's background in chemistry and essential oil mixology, combined with Mode's eagerness to try them out, made them the perfect team to start their own line of scents.

Their scents are inspired by nature, which is why they change with the seasons. But no matter what time of year it is, Rita and Mode make sure that their scents evoke positive emotions. The signature collection of candles, wax melts and diffusers have a unique scent combination, so you can find the perfect one for your mood.

Founded on good ethics, Snug Scent always use the highest quality ingredients, sourced sustainably and responsibly. Their natural wax and pure essential oils give their candles a beautiful scent that lasts for hours. Plus, their packaging is plastic free, and with every order received, a tree is planted, making them environmentally friendly.

Their goal is to create an unforgettable experience for each and every customer. They believe that when you feel good mentally, you'll also feel good physically – which is why their products are so popular.

The modern alternative to bathroom tiles

Finally, there is a high-quality alternative to ceramic bathroom tiles and floors. Bathroom panelling is made from either waterproof PVC (poly vinyl chloride) or MDF (medium-density fibreboard) with a wide variety of surface finishes. This includes stone, tile, or marble finishes including unique modern as well as traditional patterns and styles. The finish can be either flat or textured, with realistic grout lines in some tile products.

Their SPC (stone plastic composite) flooring is also 100% waterproof and comes in a variety of realistic and textured stone and tile patterns. Ceramic tiles have several key disadvantages. They are cold, which increases the cost of heating your bathroom and encourages condensation and mould. Grout is always a problem, a breeding ground for moulds and mildew.

Bathroom panels are warm, hygienic, easy to fit and offer a cost-effective, long-lasting alternative. There is no grout, resulting in a low-maintenance, tough and durable finish. This makes them ideal for the home, buy-to-let properties, hotels, and a variety of commercial uses. Being easy to fit, over existing tiles if necessary, the installation cost and time of installation of a new bathroom is significantly less than using ceramic tiles. The Panel Company is the UK's largest supplier of high-quality bathroom panels and flooring.

A refurbished townhouse with a distinctive extension

Paul Archer Design were approached to undertake the full-house refurbishment and extension of a property in North London, turning it into a spacious and stylish four-bedroom family home for a growing family.

Extending out to the side enabled the building to accommodate multiple functions on each level. The lower ground floor includes a large kitchen diner, pantry, TV room, and guest bedroom. On the upper ground floor, the new master bedroom has been inserted into a new space to the rear of the property. The entrance to this new area is situated off the side of the main hallway – giving the sense of entering a separate wing of the house and ensuring it feels private.

With a strong interest in design, the owners had a clear idea of the look and feel of the property and came with a wealth of inspiration. The owners and the Paul Archer Design team worked in close collaboration throughout the project to ensure their original vision was achieved. The interior spaces have been carefully considered, with monochrome detailing complementing natural tones and textures. Where possible, original features have been retained or restored to ensure the home felt rooted in its history.
