The Freedom and Power of the Mind

by Evan Yeh

The common intention and sentiment associated with a Western New Year celebration is “out with the old and in with the new.” With the classic caricature of Baby New Year arriving and signaling permission for everyone to start the year with fresh intentions, we see this sentiment personified in western media articles throughout modern history.

To commemorate this event, we see people participating in rituals like New Year’s resolutions, where they create a promise or intention towards various types of improvements for the New Year. As a new year is upon us, it is worthwhile for us to take a closer look at this ritual and to examine why it works for some but not for others.

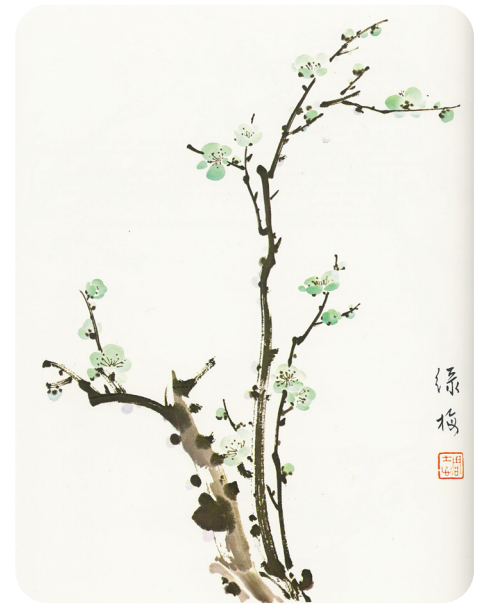

First and foremost, it is essential to understand that each of us is creating our own experience through the thoughts we choose to focus on. When the thoughts we focus on are consistent with the fulfillment of our desires, we feel positive emotion; when they are not, we feel negative emotion. So the common advice of “think happy thoughts” is simple but incredibly powerful.

The coming of the New Year offers an excuse to exercise the discipline of choosing to focus on a different thought to take our life experience in a different direction. But the reality is that this choice is available to every one of us in each new moment of our lives. The New Year simply offers a time where we become more aware of the ultimate freedom and power that we have over our life experience in each moment.

It all seems simple enough but if it is so simple, why is it that most New Year’s resolutions go unfulfilled? First of all, simple is not the same thing as easy. Most of us were attracted to spontaneous style Asian brush painting because of its simplicity, but as we start our journeys as students of the art form, we quickly realize the discipline required to paint even the simplest subjects. The same thing goes for discovering the power of our minds in shaping our life experience.

Thoughts are habitual. Beliefs are just thoughts that we think over and over again. Repetitive thoughts attract circumstances that match the thoughts. And most of us have been going through this process our whole lives unintentionally. Many of us have not gone through the process of disciplining our minds so that they can be directed to focus on thoughts that are intentionally chosen. Instead we walk through our lives being exposed to a myriad of influences from family to friends to media and entertainment that is encouraging our minds to chaotically focus on things that are none of our business. These influences encourage us to be observers of other people’s life experience rather than the creators of our own experience.

These challenges notwithstanding, there is no more powerful skill to learn than the ability to direct your mind to maintain a focus that creates a positive emotional state. Learning how to consistently “think happy thoughts,” can create a state of being where the things you want in life flow into your life experience with relative ease. I will leave you with these immutable truths: You are here for a reason. You are loved beyond imagination. You are powerful, and you are free to create your life experience as the masterpiece of your choosing. 新年快樂, 恭喜發財 (Xīnnián kuàilè, Gōng xǐ fā cái) / Happy New Year and Sincerest Wishes for Prosperity!

Year of the Dragon ~ Chinese Zodiac Cycle

Chinese New Year

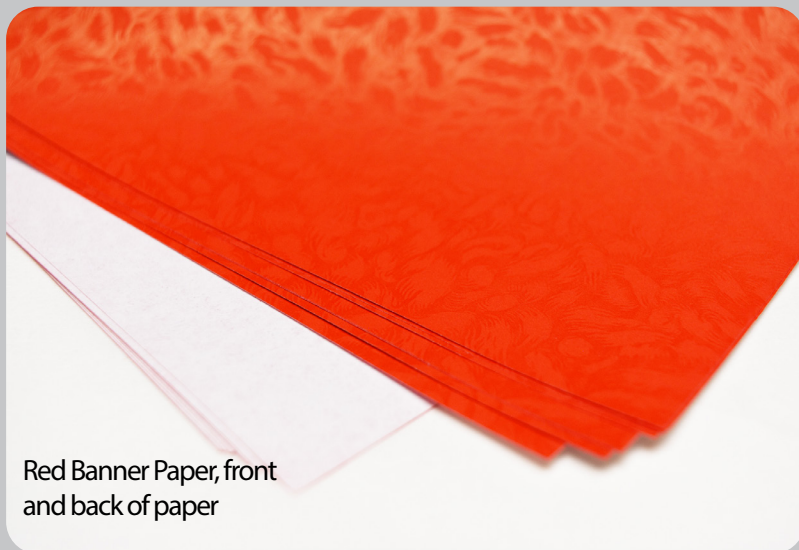

The Chinese New Year is a 15-day celebration, culminating in the Lantern Festival. It becomes a kaleidoscope of vibrant hues, echoing with laughter, feasts, and the rhythmic pulse of dragon dances. Amidst this cultural symphony, the color red emerges as a bold brushstroke, filled with the essence of luck, joy, and prosperity. It's the heartbeat of hope, the embrace of tradition, and the whisper of dreams as red lanterns sway and red envelopes exchange hands.

Make your own Hong Bao (Red Envelopes) with our Red Banner Paper and your own papercuttings with our red xuan papers! The art of papercutting can be traced back to the Han Dynasty and they were originally used for religious rituals, decorations, and folk art. Today, papercuttings are primarily window decorations.
