Biography

Sonia Smith-Kang is the owner of Mixed Up Clothing, which is a multicultural children's clothing line inspired by the textiles, cultures and people of the world, to develop friendships through fabrics. Sonia infuses ethnically diverse styles with cultural twists, blending materials and designs from all corners of the earth.

Due to her parent's military background, she was born in Puerto Rico to a Black father and Mexican mother, raised in Hawaii then settled down in California. Her husband is Korean and they have 4 children that they are raising to speak Spanish and Korean in addition to English.

Thanks to a multicultural family, growing up surrounded by rich and vibrant colors, and ever-changing demographics here in the U.S, Sonia has found that folks are connecting and identifying with her and her clothing line.

She's been featured on NBC's Today show as a mom entrepreneur, The Real, NPR, KPCC, HuffPost Live, CBS, and ABC News. Her designs are in editorials like Latina Magazine, InTouch, Babiekins, Earnshaws, and Pregnancy & Newborn.

She is an entrepreneur graduate of a program through Macy's, Inc. called "The Workshop at Macy's" which offers opportunities for women and minorities on how to succeed with big retailers.

She is Co-founder of Mixed Heritage Day at Dodger Stadium August 27, 2016 and MultiCulti Corner.

Testimonial

"I am not just one race, and I am entitled to celebrate every part of my background freely and openly... It's a beautiful thing. Being around people who are making a difference in the world one panel at a time is even more exciting. The world needs this. And Sonia is starting the dialogue." -Nikki Diaz / Blogger at Nikki Diaz.com
