MANAGEMENT DISCUSSION AND ANALYSIS

BUSINESS ENVIRONMENT, INDUSTRY STRUCTURE AND DEVELOPMENT:

Smart Meters:

Smart Metering Systems Market size is poised to cross USD 38 billion by 2024.

Increasing need for accurate billing and consumption pattern mapping coupled with rising prices of resources including water, electricity and gas will drive the global smart metering systems market size by 2024. Scarcity of available resources has laid emphasis on reducing wastage and controlling emission levels.

Stringent regulations towards energy management coupled with measures towards effective resource utilization will propel demand. The Energy Independence Act (EISA) of 2007 mandates the modernization of the U.S. electric grids, installation of smart electric systems in every household and grants government funding for grid development projects.

Smart metering systems market size for 2015 from residential applications was over USD 5 billion and is set to witness strong growth owing to its reasonable pricing and increasing awareness among customers. Commercial applications in terms of volume are predicted to surpass 250 million units over the forecast time frame due to rising prices of available energy resources.

Electric applications were valued over USD 4 billion in 2015 and is predicted to witness handsome growth owing to stringent government regulation to curb electricity theft.

AMI is set to exceed USD 19 billion by 2024. Adoption of AMI are low subject to its high acquisition and installation costs. AMR is predicted to grow over 13% over the forecast timeline owing to its wide adoption and mature technology.

For Europe, UK smart metering systems market share is predicted to grow over 16% by 2024. Government of United Kingdom initiated the National Smart Meter Roll Out programme which aims at installing smart systems in every home in England, Scotland and Wales by 2020. Recommendation 2012/148/EU mandates increasing adoption of these products coupled with large-scale roll out in regions with positive cost benefit results.

China smart metering systems market size is forecast to exceed USD 9 billion by 2024. The State Grid Corporation of China has aimed to install more than 380 million smart systems by 2020 in line with the government plan. – source global news wire.

SUPERALLOYS:

According to Statistics MRC, the Global Super alloys Market is valued at $4,170.5 million in 2016 and is expected to reach $7,957.4 million by 2023 growing at a CAGR of 9.7% from 2016 to 2023. Increasing demand for high performance, lightweight materials in aerospace, automotive, industrial gas turbines (IGT) and industrial applications is expected to have a positive impact on super alloys market growth over the forecast period. Growing demand for highly durable materials, rising demand from power industries, increasing government expenditure in emerging economies are the factors enhancing the market growth. However, high cost of base alloys is expected to hamper the super alloys market. The Nickel base segment is estimated to account for the largest share in the global super alloys market throughout the forecast period as this material possess high temperature resistant properties and oxidation resistance. Among applications, aerospace segment is expected to dominate the global market due to increasing need for lightweight and high strength materials that can withstand high temperatures. North America and Europe are the key regions for super alloys market. US, Germany, UK, and France are the market leaders in this regions contributing to the demand for super alloys. Asia Pacific is expected to emerge as the fastest growing region due to increasing demand for super alloys in emerging economies such as China and India. – source report buyer

Electric Vehicles (EV):

New registrations of electric cars¹ hit a new record in 2016, with over 750 thousand sales worldwide. With a 29% market share,² Norway has incontestably achieved the most successful deployment of electric cars in terms of market share, globally. It is followed by the Netherlands, with a 6.4% electric car market share, and Sweden with 3.4%. The People's Republic of China (hereafter, "China"), France and the United Kingdom all have electric car market shares close to 1.5%. In 2016, China was by far the largest electric car market, accounting for more than 40% of the electric cars sold in the world and more than double the amount sold in the United States.

The global electric car stock surpassed 2 million vehicles in 2016 after crossing the 1 million threshold in 2015 (Figure 1). Figure 1

Key point: The electric car stock has been growing since 2010 and surpassed the 2 million-vehicle threshold in 2016. So far, battery electric vehicle (BEV) uptake has been consistently ahead of the uptake of plug-in hybrid electric vehicles (PHEVs).

Until 2015, the United States accounted for the largest portion of the global electric car stock. In 2016, China became the country with the largest electric car stock, with about a third of the global total. With more than 200 million electric two-wheelers, 3 to 4 million low-speed electric vehicles (LSEVs) and more than 300 thousand electric buses, China is also by far the global leader in the electrification of other transport modes.

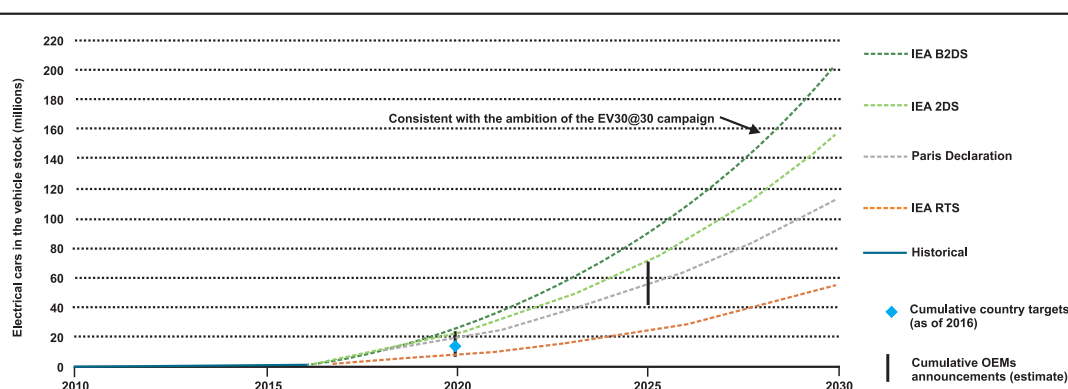

As the number of electric cars on the road has continued to increase, private and publicly accessible charging infrastructure has also continued to grow. In 2016, the annual growth rate of publicly available charging (72%) was higher, but of a similar magnitude, than the electric car stock growth rate in the same year (60%).

Despite a continuous and impressive increase in the electric car stock, electric vehicle supply equipment (EVSE) deployment and electric car sales in the past five years, annual growth rates have been declining. In 2016, the electric car stock growth was 60%, down from 77% in 2015 and 85% in 2014. The year 2016 was also the first time year-on-year electric car sales growth had fallen below 50% since 2010.

Declining year-on-year increments are consistent with a growing electric car market and stock size, but the scale achieved so far is still small: the global electric car stock currently corresponds to just 0.2% of the total number of passenger light-duty vehicles (PLDVs)⁴ in circulation. Electric vehicles (EVs) still have a long way to go before reaching deployment scales capable of making a significant dent in the development of global oil demand and greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions.

Research, development and deployment (RD&D) and mass production prospects are leading to rapid battery cost declines and increases in energy density. Signs of continuous improvements from technologies currently being researched confirm that this trend will continue, narrowing the cost competitiveness gap between EVs and internal combustion engines (ICEs). Assessments of country targets, original equipment manufacturer (OEM) announcements and scenarios on electric car deployment seem to confirm these positive signals, indicating a good chance that the electric car stock will range between 9 million and 20 million by 2020 and between 40 million and 70 million by 2025 (Figure 2)

Key point: The level of ambition resulting from the OEM announcements assessed here shows a fairly good alignment with country targets to 2020. To 2025, the range estimated suggests that OEM ambitions lie within the range corresponding to the Reference Technology Scenario (RTS) and 2DS projections from the IEA, broadly matching the Paris Declaration on Electro-Mobility and Climate Change and Call to Action (Paris Declaration).

Despite this positive outlook, it is undeniable that the current electric car market uptake is largely influenced by the policy environment. Key support mechanisms currently adopted in leading electric car markets target both the deployment of electric cars and charging infrastructure:

- EV support typically takes the form of RD&D on innovative technologies, mandates and regulations, financial incentives and other instruments (primarily enforced in cities) that increase the value proposition of driving electric. Public procurement (leading by example) is also well suited to facilitating early EV uptake.
- EVSE deployment is supported by the development of standards ensuring interoperability, financial incentives, regulations (including building codes) and permits.

A number of cities have been at the forefront of stimulating EV deployment, whether in the two wheeler, PLDV or bus segments, and municipalities are important players in helping accelerate the transition to electric driving. By testing and demonstrating best-practice EV and EVSE support policies, cities can not only act as models for other cities that seek to accelerate their transition to electric driving but also provide an example for a wide application of best practices (e.g. at the national or global level), helping to improve the cost efficiency of the policy development process. The demand-based approach adopted by the metropolitan area of Amsterdam to deploy its EVSE network by providing publicly accessible chargers to electric car owners who request them, under certain conditions, is one of the most interesting examples in this respect.

Urban areas are also excellent platforms for the experimentation of novel passenger and freight transport services based on vehicle and ride-sharing concepts or autonomous driving capabilities. Given the high mileage of shared vehicles, these concepts have strong synergies with transport electrification.

Policy support will remain indispensable at least in the medium term for lowering barriers to electric car adoption. As electric car sales keep growing, governments will need to reconsider their policy tools. Even if differentiated taxes based on environmental performance, fuel economy regulations and local measures (such as differentiated access to urban areas) are likely to remain important, the need for vehicle purchase incentives will diminish, and subsidies for electric cars will not be economically sustainable with large sales volumes. Revenues collected from conventional fuel taxes will also shrink, requiring a transition in the way revenues aiming to develop the road transport infrastructure are collected.

EV charging could also have a sizeable impact on the loads applied to the grid at certain times and locations, with consequences for adequacy and quality of power supply, the risk of cost increases for consumers and negative feedback on transport electrification prospects. EVSE deployment needs to be conceived in a way that handles these risks and takes advantage of the options available for mitigating these impacts. Large-scale electric car charging and demand response will require the joint optimisation of the timing and duration of recharging events, the modulation of power delivered by charging outlets (defining the speed of charge) and may involve a reliance on vehicle-to-grid solutions. For fast chargers, managing power demand is also likely to require the deployment and use of stationary storage at the local or grid level.

STRATEGIC INITIATIVE

PML will develop more scalable products which have large market potential. Preferably, these products will be PML designed products.

PML will add new products for EV market and aerospace.

Those Standards and the Guidance Note require that we comply with ethical requirement and plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether adequate internal financial controls over financial reporting established and maintained and if such controls operated effectively in all material respects.

Our audit involves performing procedures to obtain audit evidence about the adequacy of the internal financial controls system over financial reporting and their operating effectiveness. Our audit of internal financial controls over financial reporting included obtaining an understanding of internal financial controls over financial reporting, assessing the risk that a material weakness exists, and testing and evaluating the design and operating effectiveness of the internal controls based on the assessed risk. The procedures selected depend on the auditor’s judgment, including the assessment of the risks of material misstatement of the Standalone Financial Statements, whether due to fraud or error.

We believe that the audit evidence we have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for our audit opinion on the Company’s internal financial controls over financial reporting’s.

Meaning of Internal Financial Controls Over Financial Reporting
