100% Sustainable Aussie Brands That Will Make Spring Cleaning a Breeze

Including sprays made with aromatherapy-grade essential oils and laundry detergent eight times more concentrated than the supermarket stuff. And yes, one is a Kiwi brand - but, like Russell Crowe, we're calling it ours (and it changed the shampoo-bar scene worldwide).

Spring is here, and it's a good time for all the big, I'll-do-them-later cleaning tasks that are easy to put off when it's cold. Plus it's a time when some of us have to be more diligent about dust, pollen and allergens inside the home.

These Aussie products not only help you keep on top of those tasks – as well as the daily, weekly and as-needed cleaning you should do all year round – they're non-toxic, plant-based, cruelty-free, and in containers that are either refillable, recyclable or plastic-free.

Native Australian flora and botanicals continue to have a moment: they're on restaurant menus, in local gin, used in skincare and also in cleaning products. Run out of Sydney, Koala Eco uses aromatherapy-grade essential oils to make products like a lemon-myrtle-and-mandarin kitchen cleaner, peppermint glass cleaner, eucalyptus-and-rosemary laundry wash, lemon-scented tea tree surface spray and more. Each one is plant-based, non-toxic and cruelty-free, plus packaged in 100 per cent recycled (and recyclable) bottles. It doesn't hurt that the labels are aesthetically pleasing, too.
