SCORCHED

The Scorched dining table is inspired by the ancient Japanese technique of Shou-Sugi Ban, which is still used today in modern architecture. The timber planks are carefully charred by hand, forming a naturally protective coating. The process is very time-consuming but results in a visually stunning effect.

The same technique is used in the Scorched dining table, creating a distinctive and authentic charred finish on three wide planks of ash timber. The rich, satin-black colour highlights the texture of the wood for an immensely tactile experience, offset by the architectural lines of the Dark Bronze frame.
