We didn't know it at the time, but filming for our latest video started on November 4th 2018, when some of the squad headed out to Barcelona to officially welcome Tiago Lemos to the team. What started as a low-key filming trip morphed into something bigger, and between then and now, another video organically fell into place, just like "Never" had fallen in to place the year before. I've been traveling with the guys a ton this year, and watching the level of skating going down on a daily basis has definitely fueled the fire for my recovery from my knee surgery. I've been helping out behind the scenes with our Instagram feed, and I thought it was a shame not to create something longer lasting for everyone to keep. I've seen the response on Instagram to some of your favorite posts and I've pulled those together, as well as a ton of unseen photos to create the "Encore" photo book, an exclusive look into our second full length video shot over the last 365 days on location in North America, Europe and Asia by Oliver Barton and Florian "Burny" Hopfensberger. Recovery from my surgery hasn't been easy, but I'm so grateful to be skating again, I'm looking to seeing you all in the streets!

A skateboarder in a white t-shirt and black pants is captured mid-trick on a set of concrete steps. The skateboarder is leaning forward, with the skateboard just above the ground. The background is a blurred, bokeh effect of warm yellow and orange light, suggesting a sunset or sunrise. The ground in the foreground is paved with light-colored tiles. The word "SKATE" is visible in graffiti on one of the steps.
