HONOLULU – Heather Brown, a local Hawaii artist, has added local non-profit HUGS (Help, Understanding and Group Support) to her list of non-profits she supports through her iPhone cover sales. Earlier this month Brown launched two new iPhone cases featuring her signature artwork in which she will donate 15 percent of the proceeds to HUGS. HUGS provides support for the entire family, whose child has been diagnosed with a life-threatening illness.

"I chose HUGS because I believe in their mission statement, have had the pleasure of meeting some of the people that work with HUGS and I love to support great causes at home in Hawai'i," Brown said about choosing HUGS as one of her non-profit beneficiaries.

The two iPhone cases, which can be purchased at www.truprotection.com (<http://www.truprotection.com>) or www.heatherbrownart.com (<http://www.heatherbrownart.com>) and are made of 1 mm thick recycled plastic and will fit an iPhone 5 or 5S. Brown's cases supporting HUGS, Waikiki Surf Girl and Pupukea Surf are being sold for $39.95 each.

Brown said she chose the specific art for the two cases, "because both show beautiful Hawai'i scenes one of a boy one of a girl getting to fully enjoy Hawai'i as I would love to see every child in Hawai'i do. I hope with our little effort we can raise more awareness for HUGS and get more money to the great people that need it."

Brown has made a name for herself around the globe with her surf art. Inspired by the beauty and culture of her home, the Hawaiian Islands, Brown creates colorful artwork that has made an impression from Hawaii to Japan.

About HUGS

For more than 30 years, HUGS has been helping families with seriously ill children to improve their quality of life through programs that address their emotional, social, physical, and financial needs. HUGS receives no state or federal funding and relies on donations made by the community. Services are provided free of charge statewide to families with a seriously ill child, ages birth to 21 years.
