Straight Shooter

Name: Brit Marling.

Hometown: Born in Chicago. Now lives in Echo Park, Los Angeles.

Where We Met: Café Gratitude, a new age restaurant in Los Angeles famous for naming each dish after a life affirmation.

What She Ate: Liberated, a pasta made of kelp.

Where You've Seen Her: Marling caused a Sundance eclipse in 2011 when she burst onto the scene as the writer and protagonist of the low-budget sci-fi movie Another Earth. Since then she's appeared as an antiterrorist operative (The East) and a cult leader (Sound of My Voice).

Where You'll See Her Next:

The 32-year-old stars as a Civil War-era heroine in The Keeping Room (September 25). She and her creative partner, Zal Batmanglij (the brother of Vampire Weekend frontman Rostam Batmanglij), are also writing The OA, an upcoming drama series for Netflix.

LinkedIn Updates:

"For The Keeping Room I had to learn how to ride horses, chop wood, and shoot black-powder guns. There is a guy out in the Valley who specializes in these kinds of old-timey skills, so I went to him."

The Quote: "What drew me to The Keeping Room is that we're used to seeing women appropriate male violence. Think of the female ninja who can drop 47 male assassins and not break a nail. That's a male fantasy. In this film young women fight back in ways that are actually possible." —SARAH MESLE
