

Plant Belles in the RHS Rosemoor Gardens

Plant Belles are now also supporting plants in the gardens at RHS Rosemoor gardens, in Devon

New for 2013, RHS Rosemoor have chosen to install over 50 'Plant Belle' plant supports in the gardens nr Torrington, Devon. The belles, edging gates and plant crooks are designed to be both practical and beautiful, offering support to the plants and ornate interest for visitors. See here in the 'Hot garden'.

Placed in the borders, the elegant wire frames look great in Winter crusted in frost. As Winter subsides, Plant Belles protect young Spring growth emerging from beneath, before providing much needed support as plants reach the heady heights of the flowering season.

The Plant Belles team have been working with the Rosemoor gardens curator, Jonathan Webster, to create an extraordinary display for 2013. Whilst also working with Peter Earl, in charge of fruit & veg to put the Plant Tunnels to the test.

Plant Crooks seen here at Rosemoor, in the 'Cottage garden'. In the 'fruit & vegetable garden's', visitors will also see the plant hurdles, wigwams and plant tunnels from Plant Belles. The innovative tunnel designs form a wire cloche, covered in fleece, plastic or mesh, busy protecting the young plants from hungry pests.

Visit Rosemoor throughout 2013 and you will see the Plant Belles settle into their new surroundings:
