

PILLOW TALK

New Yorkers love to show off their town more than any other city in the world, and now Ankasa's helping to lead the charge. The company's new Jet Set pillows literally bear the stamp of civic pride, with "New York" emblazoned boldly on the front. The linen pillow collection—Paris, London, and Rio also get shout-outs—matches traditional Indian beadwork with playful block prints. "We gather much of our inspiration from travel, so we're having a lot of fun highlighting the local flair of some of our favorite cities," says Ankasa co-founder Sachin Ahluwalia. "Plus, we're approaching old-world embroidery in a totally modern way." $155 each, Ankasa, 424 Broome St., NYC, 212-226-8002, ankasa.com. — Paige Alexus

Pot Luck

What's the one thing the White House, the New York Public Library, and the streets of SoHo have in common? They're all graced with Pennoyer Newman's exclusive garden pots, cast from historic originals and made with marble, rock, and resin. The Riveted Rectangle pot (below) replicates the design of an old cistern—and just happens to bear a fashionable resemblance to a Louis Vuitton trunk. "It's up to our generation," says partner Virginia Newman Yocum, "to revive some of the best examples of garden art from the past." $1,275, Pennoyer Newman, 200 Lexington Ave., Suite 416, NYC, 212-839-0500, pennoyernewman.com. —P.A.

MADE TO ORDER

After 12 years in business as the design team of Foley & Cox, Mary Foley and Michael Cox realized that the search for the right casual furniture can be almost endless, especially when it comes to finding pieces with the proper scale and versatility for both the city and the country. Years of hunting for their clients motivated them to launch a line of their own, with a streamlined, yet comfortable 1950s wicker chaise found at auction setting the tone.

"We're happy to be able to produce some of our favorite shapes," Foley says of the collection's armchairs and chaises, which are hand-woven in Mexico by third-generation artisans of natural materials including rattan, abaca, rush, and bamboo. "They have the relaxed vibe we've been looking for." $450 to $3,750, at Foley & Cox Home, 317 Warren St., Hudson, NY, 518-828-3210, foleyandcoxcollection.com. —P. A.
