

About the author

Adam Aptowitz is a tax lawyer with special expertise in the law as it pertains to charities, not-for-profit organizations, and other non-taxable entities anywhere in Canada. His practice involves tax litigation for private taxpayers and charities and he has represented clients at the Tax Court of Canada, the Federal Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of Canada.

Adam's practice is diverse and includes (amongst other areas) high level tax planning for charities engaged in business activities, operating overseas, corporate governance and gift planning. He also works with international organizations seeking to work in Canada and with Canadian organizations operating abroad.

He also contributes to the public policy debate through academic papers and testimony to government committees. He regularly publishes in several journals, including the Canadian Taxpayer and the Not for Profit News. Adam has been recognized as among the premier charity law lawyers in Canada by the Canadian Lexpert® Legal Directory. And his firm, Drache Aptowitz LLP, has been named one of the top ten tax law firms in the country.

In addition to his legal practice, Adam is an Associate Professor of Law at the University of Ottawa and has been called to the Bars of both Ontario and Alberta.
