Arak Sewak Toothpaste & Mouthwash Series

coming to you from Africa

Our Story

From Africa

Many years ago, in response to the invitation of Sudanese ambassador to foreign consulates, Mr. Omar, we arrived in Sudan to inspect aromatic plants. Through joint discussions and research with relevant leaders and scholars of the Sudan Agriculture, National Plant Experiment Center, and the Plant Research and Development Office of Africa International University, we will set up circular economy research and development projects for representative plants in Africa and the Middle East, hoping to drive local industry growth, and the industrial chain of economic development, as well as to develop international special plant series products. Subsequently, we established a joint venture company in Sudan, established a planting base, and an international R&D team

We were specially invited by the United Nations circular economy appraiser to participate in the planning of the project for frankincense, myrrh, the baobab tree, the toothbrush tree and other plants. From scientific planting, management, mining, rational utilization, and scientific extraction, we made a series of plans. Along the way, from experimental analysis of the molecular structure and connotation of these plants that have a long history and are closely related to people's lives, we were able to perform many experimental adjustments and refinements. We have now achieved a series of plant products using frankincense, the baobab tree and the toothbrush tree.
