A glimpse into the future of work

Ben van Berkel – Founder of UNStudio

Ren Yee – Head of Innovation
Strategy & Forecasting

Over the past year USM has collaborated with the UNStudio Futures team to explore the spatial implications of work in the future. Today we can't even imagine the jobs that will exist in 2030.

Organ designer, Cybernetic director, Drone experience officer. How will our work change, and what kind of spaces will we need?

We began tackling these questions at our booth at Salone del Mobile 2018 – Home-Work. The design illustrated the merging of home and work environments which results from digital devices, platformisation and the emergence of a planetary labour market. We won two Frame awards, energizing us to dig deeper into the topic through scenario-building PlayLabs, where participants unpacked the hopes and fears which pervade conversations about the future.

So how has work changed over the past 50 years? Our beloved devices were meant to lessen our workload and increase our leisure time by allowing us to work anywhere, anytime. In reality we've ended up working everywhere, all the time. Fundamentally, our interaction with computers hasn't changed since they were invented – we stare at a screen and watch information move around on it.

What if we were no longer tethered to a desk? We forecast a more playful future for work. Business is moving from a long period where analytical skills were valued highest in the search for efficiency, to one where creative skills become essential to deal with complexity, volatility, and the requirements for constant innovation. In the future we will all need to be designers.

How should workspace respond?

The next revolution in office design will release us from our desks and allow us to use our whole bodies at work.

Personal voice assistants will guide our work and screens will be replaced by conversation, gesture and light. Extended Reality (XR) spaces will allow us to literally pull information around in physical space, from one side of a room to another.

At the same time, our persistent desire for collectivity calls for discrete environments which signal what type of interaction they are open for – from focus to one-to-one to collaboration – as well as what level of technology they contain. Some will be tech-free zones where texture and tactility win out, allowing us to display our personality and build collective identity. Eventually, tech and tactility will integrate. We'll immerse ourselves in nature, growing food with indoor hydroponic systems or taking our work out into nature using Augmented Reality to build on real-world experiences.

Application Options

A modular structure of your design, either completely or partially equipped with e-Balls and e-Tubes, is connected to a source of electricity. The structure itself conducts the low voltage electricity to the desired location using the e-Balls, e-Connectors and e-Tubes to form a circuit. USB chargers or light sources can be snapped into place in pre-cut recesses. The power supply is drawn from any point near the ground. The power supply cable is attached to a Haller e-Ball, and the power adapter is subsequently tucked underneath the furniture until only the operating switch remains visible. From this point the power supply requires no further cables but rather is integrated into the structure of the furniture.

USM Privacy Panels

USM Privacy Panels are a flexible and extendable modular system made up of individual panel units. Each panel unit consists of two layers of molded polyester fabric with a tubular cross-beam. They can be used in a free-standing version or mounted on tables to divide up the workspace, ensure privacy and absorb unwanted noise.

Winner of the German Design Award 2017

Winner of the Design Preis Schweiz 2015/16

The panels are available in two sizes, a smaller version measuring 250 × 350 mm and a larger version measuring 750 × 350 mm. These dimensions are chosen to match those of USM Haller storage and desks. All measurements refer to the distance between axes.
