Introduction and Explanatory Notes

Vince Hughes

The Battle Honors show every regiment of infantry and cavalry represented thus far in the OSG TLNB system and the formation they are attached to in game terms. In the main, these lists have been culled from set-up instructions and sheets as designated in the TLNB Army Lists contained in each box-set for each battle. Also included are names of units not added to the set-up sheets. I initially included the artillery as well. Unfortunately, the information on specific batteries and artillery companies & regiments was so patchy, I decided that the amount of holes in the information rendered them pointless to track.

Think very carefully if you have thoughts about printing this document! It is 60 pages long and will be regularly updated and errata-ed.

The lists start with the French army. Thereafter, each nation is listed alphabetically. For those nations that fought on both sides, their units are all listed together.

An entry in red means that it is an Alternate reinforcement in the battle shown. For those of you reading these that are looking for reasons other than TLNB gaming, the red means it did not appear in the real-life battle, but has been considered by the designer, Kevin Zucker as having had a chance to appear in game-terms had fate or circumstances played out another way. So for anybody researching for non-game reasons, simply ignore the red listings. It should also be noted that the lists are not presumed to be exhaustive. Instead, they list only the battles that have been represented in the TLNB system to date and will be updated with each release.

As much as I found errors in the set-up sheets included with the games (a simple wrong key-stroke may list a 46th regiment instead of 47th or 64th for example), I have corrected those here where I have enough evidence to the contrary. Likewise, I too have probably hit a keyboard note wrong here and there too. So I have absolutely no doubt there will be errata along the way. For how I/We will deal with that, please see the last paragraph.

French regimental designations changed from Demi-Brigades to Regiments in 1803. For now, I have stuck with only the Napoleonic Wars and not included the Revolutionary (Fleurus). I intend to add these in a later version following research on the DNA of regiments and their previous demi-brigade association. Units are considered to have participated in a battle if one of their 'eagles' were carried there. For example, French infantry regiments could have up to 6 battalions in them (one depot), but if just one of those battalions appeared in a battle, that will gain the regiment an appearance credit. I don't see this as problematic as most British regiments only fielded one battalion most times with an active army. Furthermore, come 1814, some French 'regiments' were little more than 2 or 3 companies in size! But again, where these were then combined together, each regiment still carried an eagle and is therefore credited for appearing in a battle. Also worth noting is the appearance of the French Line Lancers. These were created from Dragoon and Chasseur regiments. There is an accompanying note to these so that the DNA thread is not lost. Some of the higher numbered 'French' line regiments were from places such as Holland (126th for example). Despite that, as they are designated through the French line system, they have been listed under 'France'. The same with the 3rd Old Guard Foot regiment. Also Dutch, but listed under France AND the Netherlands.

The Austrian army used infantry regiments in numbered form but also went by the name of its benefactor or oberst. Therefore, the name of some Austrian regiments changes over the course of the wars. In the lists, these are defined by a forward slash separating different names for the same regiment. The Tyrolean jaegers eventually became IR No.64. However, this was made up of some 8 battalions at its height and were assigned on a battalion basis. They have therefore, where pertinent, been listed and credited by battalion. Austrian Landwehr being credited at battles is spotty at best. Even when they are credited, the regimental names are often omitted. So the Landwehr details are slim here.

Prussian forces required two sets of entries as their whole organisation and regimental numbering changed by the time of the 1813 Wars and then twice more before The Hundred Days (and again in 1816). Therefore, each infantry unit type is split into two parts. Those before the great reorganisation and those after. So, for example, the Grenadiers up to 1806 are all listed and then separated by a ----- line whereby the liberation grenadier regiments then follow. The same rule applies to all Prussian infantry types except Landwehr and Reserves. These were not in existence pre-Jena and therefore have no need of period separation. The Reserves are particularly interesting. During 1813 they were designated as the 1-12th Reserve regiments. Following the 1814/1815 changes, Reserve regiments 1-12 became Line Battalions 13-24 and in 1816 were also regionally credited as well. Prussian cavalry likewise change names and designations after the 1806 debacle. Each cavalry type (Hussars, Dragoons etc) were given a sequential numbering followed by their region.

The Russian Cossacks were difficult to list. Sometimes, within the game they were shown by their unit commander (Ataman). Other times by region (Don, Bug etc). I've listed as many Atamans as possible, but avoided listing 'Don ' Cossacks as these would have appeared in almost every Russian battle in some form.

The spellings of unit locations, whether British counties or towns and cities across Europe have changed many times over the last 250 years (Chernigov, Tshernigov, Shernigov etc). Sometimes simply due to 'fashion'. Other times due to different nations owning them! Russian town names were especially malleable. I have recorded them simply how I prefer to see them. In such a large exercise as this, I didn't have the time or inclination to look at what a spelling may have been in any particular year. So, although I welcome messages on errata and error, I won't be entertaining any on how a town or location should be spelt.

I have listed this opening doc as Version 1.00. Each time I add errata or correct something due to a reader's findings, I will adjust the version by .01. So, the first errata change would be 1.01 (and dated). As other games are added to the series, it will then change to 2.00 the first year and 3.00 the next etc. Please feel free to email me any errors at the email address below. I'll be very happy to correct any mistake in the quest to have the doc 100% right. Take note that sometimes, the printed OSG list may show something in error. Where this is the case and you are showing this as something I have recorded wrongly, I will send you the findings I made during the collation (I have copious notes and scrawlings!).

Hope these find some use and that they are enjoyed by those that play these games.
