

Town & Country Uniforms: a story originating from a family of restaurateurs and hoteliers.

Mr. Albert De Petrillo, our founder, was raised in a family of hoteliers and restaurateurs.

It was therefore expected, according to tradition, that he would eventually work for the family business in one of their hotels or restaurants.

However, his real passion lying in fashion, textile and pattern making, Albert would rather support his family by designing the uniforms needed for the various positions of their various businesses.

His first client was his uncle, the proud owner of the renowned Town & Country hotel (later becoming The Bifteck steakhouse on Côte-de-Liesse). As a token of his appreciation and gratitude for entrusting him with this first order, Albert decided to name his budding company Town & Country Uniforms, to thank and honour his uncle. He recognised that this lending hand would be his opportunity to propel his dream and his company in the wonderful industry of uniforms.

It was therefore in 1957, in the basement of his humble Montreal home, that Albert first started his uniform company. His vision allowed him to create looks that were not only original and ahead of their time, but also comfortable and stylish.

In no time, his creations sparked great interest in other hoteliers and restaurateurs. That's how the basic work garment of the time evolved into a symbol of style, pride, and sense of belonging.

True to our founder, we pride ourselves in offering uniforms that have character, style, comfort and quality. They are designed to exceed the expectations of the most demanding of professionals all while reflecting the spirit of our family business. We understand that, beyond the uniform, it's a sense of community and pride that you wish to offer your team.

67 years later, forever guided by Mr. De Petrillo's vision, we would like to thank our clients for their early support and take this opportunity to thank all our team members, that we consider family.

Thank you for your loyalty,

The UTC Family
